Richard Golightly was possibly connected with the same family as Thomas Golightly, who filled the office of Bailiff of Liverpool in 1770, proceeding to that of Mayor in 1772.

In the Liverpool Directory for 1790 a Thomas Golightly appears as a Justice of the Peace, Alderman (having passed the Chair), and Borough Treasurer.

The arms were granted by Lyon Court, Edinburgh, to Thomas Galythly or Golightly, Liverpool, 1800.

Richard Golightly is described in a Deed of Settlement of 20 June 1837 as of West Derby, near Liverpool, and subsequently resided at Rossett, Gresford, Denbighshire, where he died on 16 February 1855. At the date of the deed he was a widower, and in contemplation of his marriage with Ann Lancaster her real property, situate in Westmorland, was settled upon certain trusts. She is therein described as of Walton-on-the-Hill, near Liverpool, and was a younger daughter of Edmund Lancaster of Great Strickland, Westmorland (Arms : Argent, two bars gules; on a canton of the second a mullet of the first, LANCASTER). She died at Rossett on 8 January 1862, never having had issue.

Hugh, Bishop of Lisieux 1050; died 17 July 1077.

Roger de Busli II., a minor at his father's death; his wardship and marriage obtained "for a great sum of money" by Robert de Belesme, who claimed to be near of kin; died an infant and s.p. 1100-1, but Belesme still retained possession of his vast estates.

Beatrix, only surviving child. This marriage was judicially proved at the trial in 1220. =

(A IV.) William, Earl of Ewe, eldest son, succeeded to the Earldom on his father's death in 1090, and died before 1100. In an Inquisition taken 1 John (1199) the Knights declare that the Earls of Ew never had any right in the manor of Tickhill (Hunter's "South Yorkshire," p. 226). In Add. MSS. 31,938, p. 54, Mr. Eyton says he sold twenty manors in Sussex, rebelled against William Rufus in 1088, and was executed at Salisbury Jan. 1096.

(A V.) Henry, Earl of Ewe, succeeded before 1100; went to the Holy Land 1119, and returned 1121; died 12 July 1139, a monk at Foucarmont. He had 60 knights' fees in the Rape of Hastings. Mr. Eyton says (Add. MSS. 31,938, p. 54) rebelled against Henry I. in 1118.

= Margaret, da. of William, the Lord of Sollei, who was the elder brother of Stephen, afterwards King of England.

William de Albini, who by desire of King Henry I. took the surname of Mowbray. In Liber Niger, 1166, he declares that he enfeoffed eleven knights in Kent, "quos Comes de Eu habet in maritagio cum filia."

= Adeliza, widow of King Henry I. He had died on 1 December 1135. She was remarried between 1135 and 1139.

(A VI.) John, Earl of Ewe, after the accession of King Stephen, and by influences which we cannot now comprehend, possession of the Honour of Tickhill was given to him. Queen Matilda, however, gave it to Ranulph, Earl of Chester. In Liber Niger, 1166, he had 56 knights' fees in the Rape of Hastings, besides 6½ knights' fees elsewhere. He died a monk at Foucarmont in 1170.

= Alice, da. of William de Albini or Mowbray, Earl of Arundel and Shrewsbury, and of the Honour of Tickhill in right of his wife Adeliza, widow of Henry I. Alice died before 1204.

= Alured de Saint Martin, 2nd vir.; was a tenant of the Earls of Ewe, both in Normandy and England, in 1161, and in 1180 and 1184 we find him accounting for the issues of the Bailiwick of the Pays de Bray and the præpositura of Drincourt jure uxoris (Rot. Scacc. Norman., vol. i., pp. cii, cxxxviii). In "Archæologia," vol. xlv., p. 428, the documents relating to the Abbey of Robertsbridge in Sussex, founded by A. de St. Martin in 1176, contain also the seal of John, Earl of Eu.

Matilda. Margaret.

Both dead in 1178.

Ida, married William de Hastings, and left a son Robert, who was alive 1207. In Rot. Oblatis et Finibus, 8-9 John, 1207, under Sussex, an enquiry whether Robert de Hastings or Simon de Echingham has the greater right in the Seneschalship of the Honour of Augi in the Rape of Hastings, and if William, father of Robert, was seized in his own right and as of fee in aforesaid Seneschalship the day he died, as from free marriage with his wife Ida, da. of John Com' Augi.

(A VII.) Henry, Earl of Ewe, under age in 1170; a witness in 1178; died 1183; buried at Foucarmont (Rot. Scacc. Norman., ii., p. ccxxxii).

= Matilda, da. of Hamelin de Plantagenet (who was created Earl de Warren in 1163), and widow of Osbert de Préaux; called by the French "Matilda de Longueville;" she died in 1207, and was sister to William, Earl de Warren.

Robert, witnessed a Charter 1178; died before his brother Henry.

John, confirmed grants to Robertsbridge circa 1195; occurs so late as 1207. His estates and the title Countess of Ewe came to Alice his niece.

(A VIII.) Ralph de Ysendon, Earl of Ewe jure uxoris; he was the brother of Hugh le Brun, Comte de la Marche, who married Isabella the widow of King John; he was at Acre with Richard I.; confirms grants to Robertsbridge in 1215; died May 1219; buried at Foucarmont. = Alice, da. of Henry, Earl of Ewe; a child when she succeeded in 1186; became a widow in 1219; she held the Rape and Castle of Hastings; quitted England in 1225, and died 1247 (Stapleton, Rot. Scacc. Norman., ii., p. ccxxxiv). By his writ, 13 March 1242, Henry III. certifies that Alice, Comtese of Eu, had made fine with the King for having the custody of the lands which had been Idonea de Vipont's, which were of her fief, until the lawful age of the heirs (Rot. Scacc. Norman., ii., p. ccxxxiv; Rot. Fin., 26 Henry III.). In placita de Banco, Mich., 14-15 Henry III., 1230, rot. 2 (now called Rot. Curiæ Regis, No. 107, m. 28 dorso), Alic. Comitissa Augi claims against Stephen de Gaunt 1 caruc of land in Sauteby, co. Leicester, as rightful heir of Beatrice, sister and heir of Roger de Buylly, who died s.p., and declares exact descent as given above. Saltby is close to the borders of Lincolnshire. Hunter shews ("South Yorksh.," i., 227) that in 29 Henry III. (1244-5) she paid on $63\frac{3}{4}$ knights' fees, the extent of her Honour. There is a curious letter from John, King of England, dated Montfort, 1 April 1202, to the knights, burgesses, and tenants of the Comté of Eu, that their lady the wife of Ralph de Issondun is dead, and commanding them to receive as their lord John de Eu, whom he sends, being the just heir-apparent of the Comitatus (Rot. Scacc. Norman., ii., p. ccxxii). Of course this was on a false report.

Ralph, died 1186, under age.

Guy, died 1185, under age.

Warine.

(A IX.) Alfonsus, son of John de Brienne, King of Jerusalem; Earl of Ewe jure uxoris. = Matilda, da. and heir.

Ralph; his seal, "Raoul d'Issondoun fils du Comte d'Eu," and name are attached to the Ordinance of King Lewis concerning the Jews; he died 1248. He had married Joan, da. of Eudes III., Duke of Burgundy; she died in 1224; 2ndly, Yolendis, da. of Robert, Comte of Dreux and Braine; she died before 1240; and 3rdly, Philippa, da. of Simon, Comte of Ponthieu and Montreuil, who survived and married Ralph Sire de Coucy, who was slain at Massoura in November 1249.

(A X.) John, Earl of Ewe.

(A XI.) John, Earl of Ewe, claimed the Honour of Tickhill 18 Edward I., 1289.

Roger and Muriel left one son, Roger de Busli II., a minor under age at his father's death, and this led to one of the most momentous episodes in the history of this family. His uncle Ernaldus, his natural guardian, had died before his father. The eldest son of Ernaldus, William de Buislei, was a comparatively young man, with sons under age, and William IV., Earl of Ewe, the brother-in-law, had just died. But how it came about seems well nigh inexplicable! Ordericus Vitalis tells us how Robert de Belesme, who had succeeded his brother Hugh (whose character is commended by all the historians, but was slain in Anglesea in 1098), "presented himself to William Rufus and offered three thousand pounds sterling for his brother's Earldom of Shrewsbury (Ordericus Vitalis, book x., cap. 7) and secured to himself the succession .... He also laid claim to the lands of Blyth in right of being cousin (cognatus) to Roger de Buthlei and obtained a grant of them from the King for a large sum of money." This, of course, signifies the guardianship of the heir and custody of his lands until he came of age. It was very usual for perfect strangers in blood to pay a fine and thus secure such advantages.

The King was needy and unprincipled. Belesme was a man of great power, influence, and determination, and had his own villainous schemes to carry out. O. Vitalis was an intimate and valued dependent of the house of Montgomery, the late Earl of Shrewsbury. Robert de Belesme turned out to be the most consummate brute recorded in the whole of English history. Needless to say, the young heir was dead in 1100-1, and Belesme kept fast hold of the estates. Those were troublous times, and William Rufus died on 2 August 1100.

On the accession of Henry I. Belesme hastened to do homage and so to secure to himself his English possessions; but on the return of Robert Curthose in September 1100 Belesme joined in a formidable conspiracy to place him on the throne of England. Ordericus Vitalis, book x., cap. 18, gives us the names of some of the conspirators. They included, among others, William de Waronne, Earl of Surrey, who held Conisburgh, and Robert, son of Ilbert de Laci, who held Pontefract with sixty-three manors, most of them lying in that part of Yorkshire. King Henry, who had been narrowly watching the behaviour of Belesme for a whole year (Ordericus Vitalis, book xi., cap. 2), summoned him in 1102 to answer forty-five several offences before his court; but Belesme fled and broke out into open rebellion and fortified Tickhill and his other castles. Whereupon the King proclaimed him a traitor, called out the whole military array of England, besieged and took his castle of Arundel, and then marched to "the Castle of Blithe," whose garrison opened the gates. I cannot find their names, but do not suppose they would help me, for I feel sure Belesme would have placed some creature of his own as castellan and certainly not one of that family which were its rightful owners, and whose tenure gave them that hereditary position.

With all reasonable despatch Henry in the autumn of 1102 (Ordericus Vitalis, book xi., cap. 3) laid siege to Bridgnorth (Florence of Worcester, Anno 1102; Rog. de Hoveden, Anno 1102: Belesme had strengthened Bridgnorth, Shrewsbury, Arundel, and Tickhill Castles), and having taken it after a siege of three months proceeded with 60,000 men to besiege Shrewsbury. Here Robert de Belesme surrendered himself to his King, who banished him and his two brothers from the kingdom and deprived them of all their estates. News which was received in England, as Ordericus tells us, with a tumult of joy.

Henry of Huntingdon writes thus in his letter to Walter, 4th place: "He was a very Pluto, Megæra, Cerberus, or anything that you can conceive still more horrible .... His name was the theme of general discourse; the fearful freaks of Robert de Belesme became common proverbs." And, as Mr. Eyton remarks ("Hist. Shropshire," iii., p. 131), attaint was equivalent to annihilation.

Thus the honour of Tickhill fell as a forfeiture into the hands of King Henry I. in 1102, and it remained as a royal appanage until his marriage with Adeliza, his second wife, on 2 February 1121, when the King gave to her as her marriage endowment all the possessions forfeited from Belesme and his whole family (Roger de Wendover, Anno 1121 : "Alice, daughter of the Duke of Louvain, for her grace and beauty"). On 1 December 1135 Henry I. died. Adeliza, his widow, married before 1139—I cannot give the exact date (Mr. J. H. Round's "Geoffrey de Mandeville," p. 322)—William de Albini, who had (previously by the King's command) taken the surname of Mowbray, and he held the honour of Tickhill and all these other estates jure uxoris. This made no difference to the feudal tenants of the honour; they had been enfeoffed by Roger de Busli I. When Robert de Belesme obtained possession by a bribe, they owed their services to him; when the King took over as a forfeiture all these lands, they were his tenants in capite as of the honour of Tickhill; and when William de Mowbray obtained them jure uxoris, they held under him during this lady's life.

Dodsworth, in Bodleian MS., clx., fo. 17ª, gives as the arms of de Busli of Tickhill, Gules, one bezant, and they are so represented impaled by de Veteri ponte in Skipton Church on the tomb to the 3rd Earl of Cumberland, who died 1685 (Whittaker's "Craven," new ed., p. 435; Hunter's "Hallamshire," ed. 1869, p. 35). These are also so represented in a decorated initial letter heading the account of Roche Abbey in Dugdale's "Monasticon" (ed. by Ellis and Bandinel, 1817—30). I feel little doubt this was a "Badge" to distinguish the retainers of Roger de Busli, and that the coat of arms really was Argent, two bars sable, and the Heralds' College, in verifying the quarterings of the 2nd Marquis of Rockingham, found these to be the proper bearing for Busli of Tickhill, etc. A younger branch settled since the twelfth century at Hougham, co. Lincoln, continued to use this coat—Argent, two bars sable—until that family became extinct. (See also Harl. MS. 1047.)

DE BUSLI.

Vincent, in his MS. Collections for Yorkshire in the Heralds' College, says the Arms of De Busli were Argent, two bars sable [sometimes three].

As we find in some few of these most eminent honours of Domesday times, the great feudal lords under Tickhill are described as "Barones." In the earliest Pipe Roll extant, "Mag. Rot. Scaccarii," 31 Henry I. (1130), p. 33, "Barones de Blida redd compot de cxxj. li pro forisfactura muri Castelli de Blida." I do not quite understand how these distinctions arose, but of course "Barones" portends a great standard of dignity! In the same Roll, at p. 31, the greatest holders in Robert Fossard's Fee are described "Vavassores Roberti Fossardi redd compot de lxiij^{s} & iiij^{d}."

[Gen. 1.] We have already proved that Rogerius de Buslei, together with his brother Ernaldus, conjointly created tithes upon their estates of Buslei and conveyed them to the Abbey of the Holy Trinity of Rouen in 1065-6 (Fourth Series, II., p. 270), and he landed in England on 29 September 1066, also that he witnessed the Foundation Deed of the Priory of Blythe in Yorkshire (Fourth Series, II., p. 315), which is dated anno Dominice incarnationis Millesimo octogesimo octavo (1088).

At Vol. II., p. 270, I promised to prove the various spellings of this Christian name, and I need only refer to the "Genealogist," vol. xv. (1899), p. 136, which shews quite conclusively that Hernulf, Arnolf, Ernald, Arnaldus, Arnoud, etc., are just clerkly variations of the same name. Vide "Testa de Nevill," p. 114, "Willi fit Ernold in Nethercote;" p. 115, "Willi fit Ernulphi in Nethercote;" "Liber Rubeus Scacc.," "Simonem fit Ernulfi," "Simon fit Ernaldi;" Pipe Rolls of Northumberland, 1160-61, "Ernald de Morewic;" 1164-5, "Erñ de Morewic;" 1167-8, "Ærnulf de Morewic;" 1171-2, "Ernulf de Morewic;" Raine, cap. xii., "Meo militi Hernulfo;" cap. xiii., "Arnulfo isti meo militi" [these two are of dates between 1124 and 1153]. Mr. J. H. Round ("Geoffrey de Mandeville," p. 228) notes abundant evidence that Ernulfus and Ernaldus are used indifferently. Ernaldus also occurs written Renald, Reynald, and Reginaldus. This last variation,

I think, may have arisen in this way, and at a little later date—the "y" in Reynaldus having the usual dot above it, if somewhat crumpled or faded, could easily have been read for Reginaldus! To my eye it seems a later form than would occur in the eleventh and twelfth centuries.

At Vol. II., p. 312, we have seen that Rogerius de Buslei gave to Ernaldus, his younger brother, 7½ knights' fees of his Honor of Tickhill, and by a tenure free from all the usual services. These lay in Maltby, Sandby, Kymberworth, Scausby, Faldham, and Brodesworth in Yorkshire, and in Stanford-upon-Sore, Peverelthorpe, and Torlakeston in Notts; and in the several lists which we are able to give of various consecutive dates we find the younger branch of De Busli continuously in possession of these same manors. These lists are alone a sufficient proof of the direct male descent, but we must expect that certain erosions should take place in the current of time—lands given away in eleemosinam, etc.—and hence in the great trial for the castle and vill of Tickhill in the Octaves of St. Michael, 4 Henry III. (September 1219), and by the Final Concord resulting, 6 Henry III. (1221), this list is declared as 6½ knights' fees. Both sides, Robert de Veteri Ponte with Idonea his wife versus Alicia Comitissa de Augo (or Ewe) acknowledged this list to be correct, and it was certified by Hubert de Burgo, Chief Justiciary of England, and the other Judges associated with him.

It must be remembered that each place name here given represented at that date a great extent of land, and each contained hamlets and vills and manors, which may be and are at later dates found with separate names! Subinfeudatories to the fifth or sixth degree, or more, described themselves as "de" their house or farm! Even the great Joseph Hunter ("South Yorkshire," ii., p. 36) complains that he was puzzled by the loose way in which small holdings were called "manors" in later times! In "Archæologia," vol. lvii., pp. 285—294, we have a most interesting account how a number of ancient free tenements were bought up, between 1390 and 1476, and thrown together into one manor, and given to Winchester College! Even before the end of this earlier portion of this pedigree we shall find names of places appearing which at the Conquest were all comprised within one or other of the above great tracts of land. Coke's Institutes, sec. iii., lib. 2, fo. 83, explains that "he that holdeth by Castle-guard holdeth by Knts. service: and yet he shall pay no escuage because he holdeth not to go with the King to war."

Ernaldus de Busli lived at Kimberworth, where he had his castle and a park (Hunter's "South Yorkshire," ii., p. 26; i., p. 261; Chester Waters, p. 33). In the trial, 1219 to 1221, it was said he was "Avunculus" of Roger II., and died before Roger I., during the lifetime of Roger II. Idonea de Vipont (born about 1256) lived here until her death in 1334, and so was Lady of Kimberworth for nearly seventy years ("South Yorkshire," ii., p. 27). Mr. Hunter remarks that "the description of a park and castle, at this date, betokens something of splendour now passed away." In an extent without date of the Honor of Tickhill, Richard Duke of Gloucester is said to hold Kimberworth jure uxoris as one knight's fee, portion of the six knights' fees granted to the Busleis. It seems to have been the caput of the possessions of this junior branch.

It is remarkable that these six (or 7½) knights' fees were selected from the most beautiful tracts in the vast estates of Rogerius, and yet within a moderate distance from his castle. The Nottinghamshire estates were mostly in what is now admired as the Dukeries. The Yorkshire ones also covered a district still possessing great attractions, although greatly ravaged by the encroachment of coal-mines—and this began in very early times! We shall presently see a Charter of 1160, which shews that sea-coal was then dug—and within a few miles of Kimberworth! Of course I shall be told that the Rev. William Gilpin, about 1779, first introduced to the world the beauties of Nature! But how then can we account for the monks always placing their glorious abbeys and priories in spots of the greatest loveliness, and then by cultivation creating such an effect as led to feelings of awe and pleasure, and so on to religious reverence as well as agriculture!

Besides these great Yorkshire and Nottinghamshire estates and other lands, Ernaldus and his sons were largely subinfeuded in Roger's vast estates between Ribble and Mersey (Vol. II., p. 313), which had been given to him by Roger Pictavensis before Domesday Book (fo. 270^{b}) in 1086. The chief lordship over this great district was forfeited to the King on the banishment of Robert de Bellesme and all his family in 1102, but the subinfeudations stood fast under their new lords, and the eldest branch still held lands there, as well as their Yorkshire estates. [On the death of John de Bulli of Maltby, see Close Roll, 22 June 1213.]

It will be noticed in the Record from the Rouen Chartulary (printed "Misc. Gen. et Her.," Fourth Series, Vol. II., p. 270) that "Quidam Vir Godardus" was a nephew of Ernaldus the Prepositus, but is not mentioned as in any way related to Rogerius! This may be of no significance. The Charter relating to Buslei was a very important affair, and the Royal and other witnesses all men of dignity, while Godardus was only a "Quidam Vir," an inhabitant of the town; but it seems to me to suggest that Ernaldus was already a married man in 1065, and that his relationship to Godardus was through his wife? I have therefore compiled the following scheme, which shews that he most probably was a married man at that date. To do this I have to advance to the third generation from him, when we can prove within seven years the youngest possible age of the grandson of Ernaldus in 1121. The intervening descents will all be proved, and a great many particulars of each supplied as our Pedigree advances.

In that year (1121) Walter de Espec founded the Abbey of Kirkham, and the original Charter (Dugdale's "Monasticon," ed. 1661, vol. ii., p. 105) gives "Hiis Testibus Willielmo de Buyssy et Jordano de Buyssey et Rogero de Buyssy filiis Hawisie sororis meæ primogenitæ." Now the necessary age to qualify as a witness was fourteen years. In my researches I have only once been able to prove that a witness was of the minimum age—still it is possible. I therefore compile the following statement upwards from 1121, shewing the very latest possible dates, also the shortest space of time for marriage and offspring, say 23 years:—

	If 14 years.		If 21 years.
Taking Roger's age in 1121	1107	or	1100
and allowing for William and Jordan 3 years, then perhaps William II. would be born .	1104	or	1097
of the marriage of William I. and Hawisia, which would be 23 years earlier . . .	1081	or	1074
whose father Ernaldus would be born 23 years before that, say	1058	or	1051

This shews us conclusively that Roger, the youngest son in 1121, must have been much beyond his full age of 21 years!

Let us now try a scheme of dates downwards from Ernaldus. We know as a fact that he was of full age to create and sell his tithes in 1065—now what age shall we suppose him to be? He then exercised the very important office of "Præpositus," and represented his Sovereign and ruled over the town of Drincourt! I think we dare not consider him younger than 30 years.

We will therefore suppose him to have been born in . . .	1035
Married and offspring (23 years)	1058
William his son and Hawisia, married and offspring (23 years)	1081

But, inasmuch as 23 years is really too short a space, we will suppose their offspring to begin in 1090, then in 1121 William would be 31, Jordan 30, and Roger 28 years of age—that is, Roger would have been born in 1093.

It seems, therefore, that the supposition that Ernaldus was married before 1065 is not only possible, but more than that most likely!

And now as to "Quidam Vir Godardus." Although not apparently of noble rank, he must have been a man of considerable substance to be able to create and sell tithes on his allodial property for so large a sum as 50*s.*! Ernaldus occupying so important a position as "Præpositus" of the town was sufficient guarantee to the monks of the Holy Trinity that he was a reliable man.

Although my readers may think these two trial schemes useless, I leave them because they will help towards arriving at an approximate date for the marriage of Hawisia de Espec and William de Busli I., which William was dead long before 1121. Hawisia also seems to have been the eldest child and dead at the same date. And there are other points also where they may help us in these very early times. The arbitrary term of 23 years is an extremely short one to allow for marriage and the arrival of offspring, and I think we shall find that Roger was somewhat younger than 28 in 1121.

Ernaldus de Busli had several sons besi les the eldest William I., of whom we shall presently treat, who were subinfeuded by Roger in the lands "inter Ripam et Mersam," also in several of his other estates. In a Charter of about 1140 Warine Bussel gives to Robert, Abbot of Evesham, the churches of Penworth, Leyland, etc. By Charter dated 1094 Earl Roger Pictavensis (who was then the chief lord) gives to the Abbey of St. Martin of Sees the church of Lancaster and other lands, and the tithes of all the land of Albert Greslet and the tithe of Warin Boissel at Brestona [Preston], etc., and of all his demesne between Ribble and Mersey. Among the witnesses occur Alberto Greslet, Rogerio filio Ernaldi, G[warine] Boissel, and "A. frater ejus." (Chetham Society, New Series, vol. 26, p. 8 (imperfect); Mr. Round's "Calendar of Documents in France, illustrating the History of Great Britain and Ireland" (1899), Charter 664; also Charters 663 and 665, with other witnesses.) Mr. Farrar ("Lancashire Pipe Rolls," pub. 1902) is in error here. He has it "G.," which I at once read as "Guarino=Warin," but the original gives the full name. Mr. Farrar shews many Busseis occurring in his "Lancashire Records of the Twelfth Century," William de Bussei, Knt., who was of our [Gen. 3], also Lambert de Busai, Knt., who appears to be of the younger branch settled at Hougham, co. Lincoln. In a strange way these descendants, when permanently settled in Lancashire, took to themselves the spelling as Buissell, Bussei, and Bussell, from very early in the twelfth century! It would seem a comparatively easy task to draw a reliable pedigree from Warin Boissel and Roger, who I take to have been younger sons of Ernaldus [Gen. 1], down to the thirteenth century. The first Warin Boissel seems to have been dead before 1102 (Farrar, p. 383). In the "Liber Rubeus Scacc.," p. 569, lands in Lancashire are said to be held "exfeodo busselorum." (See also Nichols' "Leicestershire," ii., p. 110[a].) Albert Bussell, who seems to me perhaps another son of Ernaldus [Gen. 1], held one knight's fee in Broughton, co. Leicester, and also lands between Ribble and Mersey, and was possibly father of Warine Bussell, who founded Penwortham Abbey, co. Lancaster, as a cella to Evesham (Dugdale's "Mon.," ed. 1655, vol. i., p. 360). As to the various spellings of this name we find Buslei, Buithlei, Builli, Boisley, Bussi, Buci, Buceto, Buiceio, Buscel, Buly, Bulli, Buthliaco, with many slight variations of each. The Index to the "Liber Rubeus of the Exchequer" (edited by Mr. Hubert Hall) gives thirteen, and that book only comprises 1155 to 1216 A.D.

Ernaldus died a year or so before his brother Rogerius—that would be 1097-8—leaving his eldest son William de Buslei a married man with young children, and he succeeded to the 7½ knights' fees in Maltby, Sandby, Kymberworth, Scausby, Faldham, Stanford-on-Soar, Pevereltharp, and Torlakeston of the Honor of Tickhill, as well as other estates infeuded under several other chief lords.

In this History we are only following the eldest male line carried down to the present day. The other sons, if any, could be readily subenfeoffed by their uncle Rogerius in many parts of his great estates, which extended all over England and waiting development. They may be traced in several counties, and in many cases the connection with the original stem might probably be shewn; but "cui bono?" In almost every instance they were separated from their lands before the sixteenth century, and are now submerged.

I would like here to expose a snare and trap which is very apt to mislead brother genealogists in their researches. The Reports of all legal transactions have always been, and are still recorded as concisely as it is possible to abstract them. The certain points brought before the Court as claims and counterclaims were closely adhered to. For instance, in querela about lands, the first prominent grantee was named to shew the holding and then the line, long or short, often covering many generations, was carried down to some undisputed possessor, and the nearest possible to the date of trial—no earlier steps in the pedigree were required or noticed—any questions before the Court were limited and must have arisen since that established basis. The legal genealogy started from that point. It was allowed on both sides, and the Court declared that the estates held by the first prominent grantee mentioned had descended in tail male of the blood to the holder selected as the earliest limit of the disputes in Court. It was in this sense that I was able to say (on p. 23) that the several lists of their estates, as recorded from time to time, were of themselves quite sufficient and absolute proof of the direct blood descent, without the exact description and separate proofs of every generation, which to us in this enquiry is the chief satisfaction, and which shall be done as concisely as possible ; but the life careers in some instances must be more or less lengthy and ought to be historically of interest, as they will shew us that our ancestors in the twelfth century were just as brave as they ever were or ever will be. Writers of general history like to hurry over this period as one of hopeless confusion.

The snare I would point out is that in many existing genealogies students have supposed this line, long or short, to signify father and son, and so two or three generations after the Conquest have been deleted, and perhaps much to the student's satisfaction, as in almost every case he would find no "Records" at all to help him to fill up the gap, which therefore it is more convenient that he should not see at all!

To shew that I have not exaggerated I will give an instance, one only, lest I should be tedious. In the great trial of 1219 (4 Henry III.) the claimants, Robert and Idonea de Vipont, described Jordan de Busli, their direct ancestor, as the son of the uncle of Roger de Busli II. (who died under age). Alice, Countess of Ewe, the Defendant, made a point of this error, and proved that Jordanus was grandson and not the son of Ernaldus the uncle; and the decision of the Court turned upon that, and dates did not agree. The Countess proved that her ancestress Beatrix was daughter and only surviving child of Rogerius I., and was married to William, Earl of Ewe. In spite of all this the late Mr. Chester Waters ("Earls of Ewe," p. 35) sets forth a tree which shews Jordanus as son and heir of Ernaldus! and died a monk at Blythe, etc.

Thoroton, in his "History of Notts," ed. 1677, p. 184, gives a Jordanus Bussy temp. Conquest, and then, finding dates impracticable, invents and kills in 1082 another generation which never existed, and thus reaches our Jordanus, from one of whose younger sons the Hougham branch claims to descend. In the 1790 edition of Thoroton's work, vol. i., p. 3, Mr. Throsby makes Jordanus to be son of Ernaldus, and gives as a reference Esceat, 26 Edward III., No. 54, that is 1352-3, much too late. I suppose it represents another blunder. Have not looked for this Esceat.

This gap of some generations immediately following Domesday dates had no special interest for me during my years of research, but hazy recollections come back to me that I have often seen and passed over "quantum valeat," perhaps hundreds of pedigrees thus wanting.

It has taken me a long time to explain, but I hope the need of such a warning has been justified.

XI. Richard Duke, succeeded to Poerhayes and Otterton on the death of his cousin Richard Duke in 1732; baptized at Collaton-Ralegh 3 Jan. 1688; High Sheriff 1734; an Attorney-at-Law; died 7, buried 10 July 1740 at Otterton (see "Gent. He devised Otterton and Poerhayes to his nephew Robert Duke, thence in default of issue male to his brother Robert Duke, in default to his nephew John Heath, in default of heirs male to Edm. Walrond, and in default to his own right heirs, who were the daughters of his eldest brother George Duke.

N.B.—The Roman numbers are prefixed to the several owners of the Estate in the order of their succession.

Dr. Edmond Walrond had no issue male and predeceased John (Heath) Duke, so on the latter's death in 1775 the Estate passed to the right heirs of Richard Duke who had died in 1740, and these were the four daughters of George Duke of the Old Hall, Collaton-Ralegh; they disposed of the property.

It is noteworthy that on three separate occasions the Estate did not descend to the eldest son, viz., first, the grantee of Otterton, Richard Duke, who also bought Poerhayes from George Duke the lineal head of the family; this Richard selected a younger son of his brother John for his heir, apparently for no other reason than that his name was Richard, passing over Gilbert his eldest nephew. Secondly, in the next generation, Richard Duke disinherited his eldest son for matching against his will and consent (see "Westcote"); and thirdly, Richard Duke, the last lineal owner in that line, having no surviving son selected a bachelor cousin Richard Duke for his heir, the youngest son of his brother Thomas, passing over his two elder nephews George and Robert; the last named, by the irony of fate, eventually succeeded to the estate on the deaths of his brother Richard and his only nephew Robert Duke, and thus became the last born Duke to own Poerhayes and Otterton.

Scottish Funeral Invitations.

The following notices of deaths and invitations to funerals were found amongst the papers of the late William Henderson, Esq., of Redford, and have now been arranged chronologically and bound together for their better preservation by the undersigned. Most of them appear to have been sent to or by the lairds of Redford in Muiravonside of the families of Calder, Waddell, Graham, and Henderson, who succeeded thereto in turn by inheritance and cover a period of exactly a century. Usually the notice is dated the same day as the death. They relate chiefly to relatives, but it is evident that many strangers are included. The majority of the funerals were at Muiravonside, Slamannan, Shotts, and New Monkland. The earlier notices are written but from 1835 they are mostly printed, the later ones being lithographed. The earliest black border is in 1829. Only one seal is heraldic. Several notices are mutilated, but only three in any important particular.

THE POWNOLL FAMILY.

The following notes on the Pownoll Family may be of interest, as connected with that of Acworth. I should be greatly obliged for any assistance in tracing the connection between the different persons mentioned in earlier times, their relationship to the Pellews, and any records of the family after 1787. I believe Edward Pownoll was Clerk of Survey at Woolwich Dockyard somewhere about 1800. It is interesting to note the recurrence of the names Israel and Philemon from the year 1577 down to 1787, and probably much later. I cannot find in any Directories of the present time the name as spelt herein Pownoll.

"St. Germans," Teddington. ARTHUR STEPHENS DYER.

Israel Pownoll, Rector of Orgarswike, Kent, 8 August 1577.

Israel Pownoll of Somerset Gent., Broadgates Hall, matriculated 14 November 1606, aged 16, B.A. 13 February 1609-10.

Philemon Pownoll, Rector of All Saints, Canterbury, 10 Feb. 1608.

Israel Pownoll of Haling, Hants, c. 1670.

Philemon Pownell, ob. 1 March 1660, æt. 55. "One wife, one son, and six daughters." Bur. at St. Andrew's, Shebbertswell, Kent.

Israel Pownoll, son of Israel of Deptford, Kent, Armiger; St. Mary Hall, matriculated 14 Dec. 1774, aged 24; B.A. 1778.

Philemon Pownoll, Queen's Coll., matriculated 10 July 1686, æt. 17; Student of Inner Temple 1688.

Israel Pownoll of Plymouth, Shipwright, late of Portsmouth. Deed dated 1694, mentions Judith, wife of above, and John Heager and Bridget his wife, relates to lands in Plymouth, Portsmouth, and Isle of Heylinge.

Israel Pownoll of Chatham. Patent granted 3 April 11 Q. Anne, by writ of Privy Seal. (Add. MS. Brit Mus. 33052, fol. 5.) He was afterwards appointed Builder of His Majesty's Yard at Plymouth, when he was taken ill and died. His children then living Israel, Philemon, and one da., the wife of Mr. Jacob Puckering. (Add. MS. 33056, fol. 371.)

The Pownolls were said to be related to the Pellews (Exmouth, Viscount). The relationship would seem to have occurred through Humphrey Pellew of Flushing, who died 1721, the grandfather of the 1st Viscount, and probably through his marriage with Judith Sparnon of Breage in 1692, since one out of their seven sons bore the uncommon name of Israel.

Israel Pownoll, Master Shipwright, of Plymouth, late of Portsmouth; living 1694. = Judith ....

CROMWELL DEATH.

[Fourth Series, Vol. II., pp. 218, 293.]

According to Noble's "Memoirs of the House of Cromwell," vol. ii., p. 7, the widow of the third Lord Cromwell (1560—1607) was living in St. Martin's parish, Stamford, in 1644, when Oliver Cromwell was marching through. As it is probable that Cromwell Death belonged to the family of Deaths that were partly settled in that parish, this fact may afford a clue to the origin of his remarkable first name.

The widow of the third Lord Cromwell was Frances, daughter of William Rugge of Felmingham, Norfolk; she married as her second husband Viscount Powerscourt, who died s.p. 9 September 1634. The date in Noble is a difficulty, as according to G. E. C. ("Complete Peerage," sub Powerscourt) she died before 30 November 1631.

Noble also refers, vol. i., p. 239, to a "very exact and accurate genealogy" of the Cromwells "in the possession of Mrs. Wingfield of Stamford." Wingfield was the family name of Lord Powerscourt.

It is worth noting, though it may only be a coincidence, that in the will, dated 8 Sep. 1624 (proved P.C.C., 1625, see "Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Fourth Series, Vol. II., p. 330), of William Goddard, Ensign to Captain Henry Theobald, "serving the States of the United Provinces," Captain William Crumwell and Thomas Death, "now gent.," in the company of the said Captain Theobald, are both mentioned.

PEDIGREE OF DENISON OF WAKEFIELD AND LEEDS.

We have been favoured by the Compiler, Samuel Denison, Esq., with the Pedigree of Denison. It is printed on a sheet 23 by 29, and begins with Giles Denison of Wakefield, yeoman, 1637, and is well authenticated by his autograph, and also by those of six generations after him, bringing the whole line down to the Compiler, born in 1858. It forms a worthy record of a good old Yorkshire family.

Reviews.

Association for the Preservation of the Memorials of the Dead, Ireland. Vol. VII. for 1907. Dublin: Published by Messrs. Ponsonby and Gibbs, University Press.

THE two Parts constituting Vol. VII. of the above work are nicely produced, the whole making upwards of 400 pages, and each enclosed in a paper wrapper. Commencing with Reports from Antrim, the Work takes the counties in alphabetical order, so on to Wicklow. There are thirty-two illustrations, some with arms, giving those of Collingwood, the Maud Plunkett, with the tomb at Malahide, Molyneux arms in Dublin, and several rubbings, monumental inscriptions, and monuments in Limerick, etc. The whole is well got up, and the volume finishes with a long list of Funeral Entries in Ireland.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. Vol. XV., No. 3, January 1908. Published by the Virginia Historical Society, Richmond, U.S.A.

THE Journals of the Council of Virginia from 1737—1763 commence this Part, being copied from the original Archives, and are followed by the Documents relating to the French and Indian War in 1755—1762. In other articles are given the Orders and Proclamations for Virginia, and the Revolutionary Army Orders under Washington in 1778-9. Virginia Gleanings in England are also continued; they give the wills of several gentlemen from 1635 and upwards, some of them remarkable for the number of persons named who had bequests made to them. In Historical Notes there is an account given of Purleigh Church, in Essex, where the Rev. Lawrence Washington was rector from 1632—1643, who was the father of the American Washington. The Church dates from Henry II., and on the dissolution of the monasteries the Crown became the patron, when it passed by gifts or purchase into the Horsmanden family, until purchased by Oriel College, Oxford, about 1770. In the Register Book of Purleigh Church are several accounts of births, deaths, and marriages of the Horsmanden family, and the paper gives a good view of the turreted church. In Genealogy is still continued the accounts of the Brent family, also of the Mallory and Brooke families. The Part finishes with the title sheet and list of members of the Virginia Historical Society in 1907.

The Journal of the Ex Libris Society. Vol. XVII., Parts 11 and 12, November and December 1907. London: A. and C. Black, Soho Square.

THE November Part opens with a goodly array of new Members, and also with a gracefully designed bookplate by Miss Lawson. There is also a double plate of eight bookplates by Mr. Thomas Shepard, all nicely drawn, one of which shewing a printing office with press and man working for Herbert Dulley. Mr. Graham Johnston, of the Lyon Office, Edinburgh, has a new plate designed for Miss Edith D. Stuart Gray, and Mr. Ern Hill, of Birmingham, shews an interior of a library with a reader perusing a volume, engraved for Norman G. Brett James, Esq., of Lincoln College, Oxford. The above, with seven examples of silversmiths' work of the eighteenth century, form a substantial Part.

The December Part has an early plate for Darcy Lever, Esq., in 1718, and also shews two other Lancastrian plates of Radcliffe and Gibson. There are also five bookplates of Jamaica families, all of old designs, but fairly drawn, and are shewn by Mr. Frederic Gattle. There is a French dedicatory plate given, shewing good workmanship. Miss S. Dyke shews five modern bookplates, well engraved, and Mr. Ern Hill has a neat bookplate for Miss Marian Litle, and there is also a plate shewn of eight designs of shields of our old nobility.

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record. Vol. XXXIX., No. 1. January 1908. New York: 226 West 58th Street.

THIS Number opens with a splendid portrait of the Rev. Melatiah Everett Dwight, M.D., D.D. Born in 1841 in Massachusetts, the eighth line in American descent; he qualified first in medicine, being an M.D. in 1864; studied theology at Andover, and graduated in 1866, and was called in 1879 to the Congregational Church at Iowa. The Record lost a good worker and Editor when he died in September 1907, and he left behind him a world of admirers and friends, all bearing testimony to his past work. There is also an account of the Dutch Titus family, and a full account of the Knickerbocker family (to be continued); and with the Records of the United Brethren Congregation and the Skillmans of America, with also the Town Records of Southold, New York, the whole forming an interesting Number.

Fenland Notes and Queries. Vol. VII., Part 76. January 1908. Edited by Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. Peterborough: George C. Caster, Market Place.

THIS Part opens with an account of Overton Waterville Manor House, with an illustration of it as built in 1571, and a view of the Stone Doorway. Some Notes on Leverington Church are accompanied by several inscriptions, dating from 1682, and it also has a Chancel Window dated 1429. Conclusive evidence is also afforded of the existence of a Norman Church. There are several references to other churches, that of Skirbeck Church, in which the writer notes changes since A.D. 907, and he gives an account of it in 1407.

Register of Freemen of the City of London

IN THE REIGNS OF HENRY VIII. AND EDWARD VI.

TRANSLATED AND EDITED, WITH AN INTRODUCTION AND INDEX,

BY CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A.,

Honorary Secretary of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society, etc.

The MS. from which this Register was collected was burnt in a fire which occurred in the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall in February 1786, it being lost with a matchless series of documents illustrating the condition and progress of trade within the City. The volume represents all that is known to exist of the Registers of Freemen. The principal document is the Egerton MS. 2408 in the British Museum, purchased by the Trustees in 1877. The MS. consisted only of thirty leaves, the margins being burnt on all sides, and holes through some of the leaves. The second MS. was bought at public auction in 1896 by the Guildhall Library, having been previously purchased by the Rev. Henry Cross in 1849 at an old curiosity shop.

The Work has been very carefully edited by Mr. Charles Welch, and in giving an Admission by Apprenticeship in Latin he appends to it a translation. Where a cook wanted to purchase he had to pay £20, but admission by apprenticeship was 14*s.* 10*d.*, whereas those by patrimony ranged from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 15*s.* 4*d.* The total sum is given on each page, and where the names are not decipherable blank dots are inserted. Every care has been taken to ensure accuracy, and the Editor has to be congratulated on rescuing such an important document from oblivion.

Just Published, price £2 2s.

Genealogical Notes

TO THE PEDIGREE OF THE

Family of Tuthill of Peamore, co. Devon, etc.

The name of Tuthill and its variants Tothill, Totehill, Toothill, is derived from hills called Totha-hills or Tote-hills, consecrated by the ancient Britons to the worship of their god Totha, the British Hermes or Mercury.

Tothills occur in many parts of England under the several forms of Tot, Tut, Toot, Tote, etc. In the ancient records we find Tuthill, near Thetford, in the county of Norfolk, was the site of a memorable battle between Edward the Martyr and the Danes in 871. Tuthill, Tothill, Totehill, etc., as a family name can be traced back as far as the thirteenth century, when John le Harpur de Wakefield and Eleanor his wife granted to Thomas de Touthill an annual rent of eight shillings, which the said Thomas de Touthill had recovered in 14 Edward II., 1239, from William, son of Adam de Lee, in Old Linley in the parish of Halifax, Yorkshire. In Devonshire we find that John Gifford held Ackot of Alice de Tothill in 20 Edward I., 1292. In Cambridgeshire Joan Totehall had a manor in Swaffham Prior in 1408. Blomefield states that in the old church of Redenhall, county of Norfolk, an inscription is still in existence that in 1464 Richard Totyll was buried in this church.

In Devonshire the Tuthills possessed considerable landed property at Peamore, Exeter, Bagtor, Sowton otherwise Little Durnsford, Plymouth, etc. The estate of Peamore or Peimount, which William le Speke possessed under Edward II., in the minority of Thomas FitzRalph, afterwards in the possession of the Cobham family, but on the attainder of the Duke of Suffolk it fell to the Crown and was purchased by Jeffrey Tothill. It was held by him and his descendants until Henry Northleigh inherited it through his mother Joan Tothill, daughter and coheir of Henry, son of Jeffrey Tothill.

The Tothills filled various stations of honour and trust, the records shewing that William Tothill was Bailiff of Exeter in 1528, again in 1548, High Sheriff of Exeter in 1549, and Mayor in 1552.

Jeffrey Tothill was Recorder of Exeter in 1563, which he held to the date of his death; also during this time he represented the City of Exeter in Parliament. Richard Tothill, in the reign of Elizabeth, attained considerable eminence as a Printer and Stationer in London, where he resided at the "Hand and Star" in Fleet Street. Henry Tothill was High Sheriff of county Devon in 1623 and 1624. George Tuthill, Bailiff of Exeter in 1662, and again in 1664; Mayor in 1668, and again in 1677. In 1688 when William Prince of Orange landed at Torbay and advanced with his small army he found the gates of Exeter closed against him. Jenkins, in his "History of Exeter," says George Tuthill, Esq., one of the Aldermen, opened the west gate and admitted the troops. Subsequently the said George Tuthill, who was largely engaged in mercantile business, met with very heavy losses at sea, which coming to the knowledge of the Prince after his advancement to the throne, he gratefully awarded him a pension of £200 per annum.

The following Grant of Arms was made to Geoffrey Tothill and to the descendants of his father in June 1561 by William Harvey, Clarencieux:—

ARMS.—Azure, on a bend argent cotised or a lion passant sable, armed and langued gules.

CREST.—On a wreath argent and sable, on a mount vert a turtle-dove proper, holding in its beak an olive-branch vert, fructed or.

MOTTO.—"PACIS AC LEGIS JURE."

William Tothill married Anne,* daughter of . . . . Wood of Merton, co. Devon, and had issue: 1 William, 2 Christopher, 3 John, 4 Richard, and two daughters, 1 Elizabeth, married Crispin Hopar, and 2 Anne.

(15.) Halse Tothill, Thomas Tothill, and Elizabeth Tothill died without issue. (Westcote's "Devon.")

(16.) William,‡ eldest son and heir, an eminent lawyer, appointed one of the six Chancery Clerks. He compiled one of the earliest Reports in Chancery ever published. This volume is known as "Tothill's Reports." He was very wealthy. He purchased a beautiful mansion and grounds called Shardeloes, situated about a mile from Amersham in Buckinghamshire, where, as Lysons says, he had the honour of entertaining the Queen in one of Her Royal Progresses. He died and was buried at Amersham December 1626. M.I. On north side of chancel† within the rails in church of Amersham is a marble monument with the half-figure of a man in a gown and wig, lifting up the left hand, the right on his breast, and this inscription :—

Gulielmus Tothill arm' apud Devoniensis honesto loco natus antiquis majoribus et moribus. Academicis primo studiis imbutus mox jurisprudentia nomen dedit, cuius admodum peritus evasit et in illa palæstra se exercuit donec unus e six clericis Cancellariæ (quos vocant) crearetur. Vir singulari prudentia eximia pietate et charitate in pauperes spectabilis, inter alia Apostolici præcepti memor (qui non laborat nec manduerat) equis suppeditebat materiam industriæ aliena largitione victitarent et omnis iquaviæ præcideretur occasio. He married Katherine, sister to Sir John Denham, Knt., Baron of the Exchequer, and had two daughters, 1 Joan and 2 Katherine. William Tothill impaled his wife's arms : Gules, three fusils ermine (Harl. 5524). Katherine Tothill died and was buried at Amersham, aged 60 years.

(17.) James‡ Tothill, 2nd son, married Ellen, daughter of William Gooch of Grysyswacht, and had a son, Edward, born in or before 1591.

(18.) Richard§ Tothill. It is probable this is the Richard Tothill who sailed with his wife Mary and three children from London, April 1635, in the ship "Plantar" for America and settled in Boston, Mass., where she died and was buried in the Granary Burial-ground there. Her tombstone bears the Tothill coat of arms of Devonshire. He died there, and was probably buried in the same grave with his wife. He had a son John, born 1625 ; died 1653.

(19.) John§ Tothill, 4th son of Richard, is believed to have sailed with his wife and four children in the ship "Plantar" from London in April 1635 for America and settled in Boston, Mass. He came over from Boston to Ireland on business ; during his absence his wife Joanna managed his affairs in Boston. He died at Carrickfergus in Ireland 30 December 1656. (25.) William‡ Tothill, eldest son and heir, of Middle Temple, admitted 4 March 1612; no record of his call to the Bar; of Peamore, co. Devon, which he inherited from his father-in-law Henry Tothill, who also appointed him executor of his will.

William Tothill died§ 26 April 1645, and was buried at Exminster. Will dated 27 April 1643; proved 16 May 1645 at Exeter by his widow Elizabeth. He married 1st his cousin Grace, daughter and coheir of Henry Tothill of Peamore; she died 24 February 1623, aged 18 years; buried§ 29 Feb. in Exminster Church. M.I., with the following inscription on mural tablet in the Peamore Chapel:—

This monument is erected to thee memorye of Grace, wife of William Tothill of the Middle Temple, Esq., who having issue Henry, died the 24th day of February 1623 in the 18th yere of Her age and lieth buried in this ile, being the daughter of Henry Tothill of Peamount then Sherife of Devon

And Mary his wife:
Et deest et superest.

If Grace could lengthe of days thee give,
All virtue coulde haue made thee live.
If goodnesse coulde thee here have kept,
Or Teares of frindes which for thee wept,
Then had'st thou liv'd amongst us here
To whom thy vertues made thee deere.
But thou a sainte did'st Heaven aspire,
While's here on Earth we thee admire.
Then rest, deere corps, in mantle claye,
Till Christ thee raise the latter daye.

Thy yeres were fewe, thy glasse being runn,
Where death did ende thy life begunn.

Speak, Statue, tell her story,
Its Grace inherits glory.

Above the inscription is a lozenge with the arms of Tothill, and below this lozenge is the Tothill coat differenced with a label below a crescent (denoting the eldest son of a second son), impaling Tothill.

William Tothill married secondly, on 19 December 1626 at Exeter, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George Southcote of Dartmouth Castle and of Shillingford, co. Devon, Knt., fourth son of Thomas Southcote of Shillingford. She was left executrix of her husband's will and guardian of his children. She died 12 Dec. 1647 and was buried§ at Exminster. Chapman of Whitwick, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Upton, etc., co. Leicester; Stoneleigh and Atherstone, co. Warwick; Retford, co. Nottingham; London, etc.

This Pedigree is based on one beginning with Thomas Chapman of Whitwick and Elizabeth (Moore) his wife, and comprising all the subsequent branches of the family, dictated to the Compiler, about the year 1868, by Miss Jane Chapman (1779—1870), which has proved to be remarkably accurate. It has been amplified by particulars obtained from the Wills at Leicester, from the Parish Registers at Whitwick and Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and from Nichols' "History of Leicestershire," as well as from information kindly communicated by Mr. Robert Power of Uppingham, Mr. Samuel Chapman of Perth, Mrs. Hand, the Rev. Justice Chapman, Mrs. Mee, Mrs. Lowndes, Mr. W. F. Carter, Mr. H. Hartopp, and others.

The Arms attributed to this family are: Per chevron argent and gules, a crescent counterchanged, a canton of the second. Crest: A dexter arm embowed in armour, holding in the hand a broken lance in bend sinister, all proper, enfiled with a chaplet vert. Motto: CRESCIT SUB PONDERE VIRTUS. Sometimes the tinctures appear as Or and Gules, and frequently the canton is omitted. There is a tradition in several branches of the family, traceable to the early part of the eighteenth century, that the Chapmans went to Whitwick from the neighbourhood of Hinckley, co. Leicester, and that they are of the same stock as William Chapman, who removed thence to Ireland under the auspices of his cousin Sir Walter Raleigh, and founded the family of Chapman of Killua Castle, co. Westmeath, Bart. If this tradition is true the canton in the arms is an error; but evidence to shew the parentage of John Chapman, with whom the Pedigree begins, is not at present forthcoming.

Monuments

AT

North Baddesley, co. Hants.*

The following Notes of the Monuments and Heraldry in the Parish Church of North Baddesley, made by the Writer more than thirty years since, may be of some interest, especially as they add some particulars to the Dunch Pedigree in the "Visitations of Berkshire," lately printed by the Harleian Society, while at the same time some of the shields exhibit curious heraldic fancies.

A handsome mural monument with shallow canopy supported by pillars has these three shields, one on either side, the one with the crest being in the centre over the canopy.

On the enclosed panel is an inscription, the substance of which is, that it is In memory of John More, the last of the four sons of John More, Esq., who died 15 August 1620, aged 59 years, leaving two sisters, Dulcibella, married to Samuel Dunche of Pusey, and Anna, married to Edward Hooper of Chilworth in this county.

The arms at the top are Ermine, on a chevron between three Moors' heads couped at the neck in profile sable, two swords in chevron points in chief argent, hilts and pommels or, More; impaling Argent, a chevron ermines between three talbots passant sable. Crest: A demi-Moor holding a two-handed sword over his left shoulder all proper. On the left hand: Sable, on a chevron between three towers triple-towered argent, a mullet for difference, Dunche, impaling More as above. On the right hand is a shield: Per pale, the dexter per fess, in chief Dunche as above; in base: Gules, on a chevron between three portcullises or, five roses of the field, Port or Bounde, impaling More as above. This shield is a peculiar and altogether incorrect arrangement. On the dexter side are the arms of the husband of one sister, and in base the husband of the other sister is represented not by his family arms, but by a coat they quarter, for on 15 November 1562, Robert Cooke, Clarenceux, confirmed to John Hooper of New Sarum these arms: 1 and 4, Or, on a fess between three boars passant azure, as many annulets of the field, for HOOPER; 2 and 3, Gules, on a chevron between three portcullises, chains pendant or, five roses of the field, PORT [but query BOUNDE of Plymouth who used this coat]; at the same time granting to the said John Hooper this crest, viz.: A boar's head and neck erased azure, bristled and tusked or, semée of bezants. It is an open question how this arrangement came to pass, for Dunche is already represented impaling More on the left hand shield; possibly Dunche was painted at a later repainting in place of Hooper, which had been obliterated and the charges forgotten, for it was not unusual to use the dexter or sinister half of a shield in which two coats were quartered; this would place Hooper in chief and Port in base as on the monument. This is quite conjectural, but seems the most reasonable explanation.

The following is an abstract of the will of John More, the father mentioned on the monument; the son died it appears in 1621, less than a year after his father.

Will of John More, Sergeant-at-Law, dated 15 August 1620. To Sir James Wolveridge, Knt., and William Noye, Esq., the manors of Baddesley, Chilworth, Romsey Infra and Romsey Extra, with all lands, woods, underwoods, etc., in the county of Southampton, except testator's rectories, tythes, parts of tythes, his dwelling house called Baddesley House in Baddesley, with the enclosed ground called the Park, also all lands and tenements in Baddesley, except the woods and underwoods, and which for the last two years have been in testator's own occupation, or such lands and tenements as are held in farm by indenture. The said Sir James Wolveridge, Knt., and William Noye, Esq., to hold the same in trust to pay all legacies out of the profits, and after for the use and benefit of testator's son John More. To daughter Anna More £1600 at her age of twenty years, or marriage if sooner, the trustees consenting, and until the £1600 is paid she is to have £100 a year by quarterly payments. Daughter Dowcebell Dunche to have a piece of plate of the value of £10, and to each of her children a piece of plate of the value of £20. Son John More to be executor, and the said trustees Sir James Wolveridge and William Noye to be overseers.

Witnesses: J. Drake, Will. Weston, Evan Powell, Jo. Smith, Jo. Swanton.

Codicil dated 13 August 1620. To servants John Swanton, John Smith, and to Evan Powell who attended testator in his present sickness, each £20.

Witnesses: John Drake, Ed. Chadwell, John More.

Proved 17 October 1620 by John More the son and executor.

On 15 August 1621 further administration was granted to Dowcebell Dunch alias Moore, and Ann Hooper alias Moore, daughters and eventual heirs of the testator, with Edward Hooper the husband of the said Ann Hooper alias Moore, of the effects unadministered by John Moore the son and executor. (P.C.C., 91, Soame.)

This family of Dunche were brought to Baddesley by the marriage of Samuel Dunche of Pusey in Berkshire [see "Visitations of Berkshire," Harl. Soc., vol. i., pp. 88, 196] with the elder daughter and coheir of John More, Esq., as mentioned on the above monument and will. There are five floor-slabs which alone represent the Dunche family in the church; of these two have the arms of Dunche impaling More, and three exhibit a very fanciful variation of Dunche and More, impaled as we shall see. The earliest stone commemorates Dulcibella, wife of Samuel Dunche, Esq., and daughter of John More; she died 10 July 1664, aged 65. Above the inscription are the arms of Dunche impaling More, but no crest.

The next stone in point of date is for the above Samuel Dunche, who died 20 Oct. 1668, aged 77 years.

The same arms, Dunche impaling More, surmount this inscription as are on the above stone.

The will of this gentleman is a somewhat long one, but full of interesting particulars, of which the following is a brief abstract:—

The will is dated 8 November 1667, and styles the testator Samuel Dunch of Badgley in the county of Southampton, Esquire. He desires to be buried at Baddesley, spelt Badgley. Names granddaughter Mary Wright, daughter of son-in-law Wiseman by his first wife, to have twenty marks yearly for her life, and after her death the same to continue to her youngest child for its life. To Mr. Lancaster, late Minister of "Badley," £20 a year for his life. To Mr. Samuel Blower, now residing with testator, for the great pains he has taken for the spiritual good of testator and his family, £20 a year for his life. To Mr. Webb, late Minister of Droxford and residing at Hursley, £10 a year for his life, but if he dies before the end of seven years then the same annuity to be continued to his wife and children until the end of seven years from testator's death. To Mr. Cox, late Minister of Stoke in the county of Southampton, £8 a year for his life. To Mr. Vavasor Powell twenty nobles a year during his life. To Mr. Dunch, Minister of Burton in Gloucestershire, twenty nobles yearly for the term of his life. To Dorothy Blinco, sister of Edmund Kirton, £5 yearly for her life. To Mary Haughton, wife of Thomas Haughton of Banbury, £5 a year for her life. To poor Besse Barnard, now living with testator, £3 yearly during her life. To the poor of the town of Church Lamborne in Berkshire 40s. a year for ever. To grandson Samuel Dunch £100 for a legacy when he is at the age of nineteen years. To the three daughters of testator's son Dunch, viz., to Dulcibella £50; to Anne £50; and to Dorothy £50. To grandchild Dulcibella Beck £10. Daughter Pitman's children, to each £10. To daughter Wiseman's children in lieu of plate testator's sister Isam gave them, each to have £40. To Mr. Marshall, Minister, now living at Hursley, £20. To Mr. Crofts, late Minister of Motsford [i.e., Mottisfont] in the county of Southampton, twenty nobles. To Mr. Poell, Minister, now a prisoner in Elminster Gaol, £10. To Mr. Pinckney, ejected Minister, £10. Mr. Behott, now living in Hampton [i.e. Southampton], £5. To Richard Paisy £20 in consideration of the enclosure which his grandfather made with me in a common called Charbery in the parish of Charny in Berkshire. To John Wells the elder of Wantage £3. To old servant John West £30 and wearing apparel. To each of the other servants 40*s*. To the town of Witney in Oxfordshire £10. To twenty of the poorest people in Wallingford each one noble. To the poor of Winchcombe, Stowe-in-the-Wold, and North Latch, all in the county of Gloucester, to each place twenty nobles. To the poor of Newbury twenty nobles. Poor of Blueberry 40*s*. All the annuities and legacies to be paid out of lands called Shippherds field and lands in Longworth, Leonard's tithe in Charny, and Weeke in the parish of Goosy. Son John Dunch, Esq., to be executor, and he to lay out £10 every seven years for charitable uses in Berkshire and Hampshire. Said son to have the above lands, together with the grounds in Goosy, in the tenure of Richard Stroud of Wantage and Richard Molden of Charny, provided he pay the aforesaid annuities and legacies, but if he refuse to do so then the same lands to son-in-law Mr. John Pitman and Mr. Robert Lancaster, they paying the same charges.

Witnesses: Samuel Blower, Timothy Goodaker, Walter Marshall, Robert Webb.

Proved 13 Nov. 1668 by Major Dunch, grandson by the son and next of kin to the said Samuel Dunch of Baddesley and Pusey, the son and executor being deceased. Adm'on 5 December 1683 to Dorothy Wright alias Dunch [sic, but "Wiseman"], wife of William Wright, clerk, granddaughter, of effects left unadministered by Major Dunch, grandson by the son.

Another stone is in memory of Ann, daughter of Richard Major and wife of John Dunche. She died 30 November 1665, aged 34 years.

The arms on this shield are altogether incorrect; on the dexter only two instead of three towers are given for Dunch, while it impales a coat apparently founded on the arms of More of Baddesley ; there is the chevron charged with two swords, but the Moors' heads and ermine spots are omitted, and in place of the heads we have a tower in chief and an anchor in base. This is evidently a fanciful alteration made without any rule. The dexter ought to have been the proper coat for Dunch, and on the sinister should have been the arms of Major, an anchor and three roses on a chief.

The husband of the above lady is commemorated on an adjacent floor-slab, inscribed for "John Dunche, Esq^{re}, only son of Samuel Dunche, Esq^{re}, who died 30 Oct. 1668, aged 38."

The arms on this stone are the same erroneous ones as on the last one described and leaves nothing to say on that point, but we append an abstract of the will of this John Dunche, which gives some interesting information beyond its genealogical data, viz., John Dunche, late of Pusey in Berkshire, Esq., deceased, did on the 28 October 1668, being then sick in body but of perfect mind and memory, make his will by word of mouth. Speaking to Major Dunch his eldest son, whom he had called to him, desired he would live in the fear of God and see his brothers and sisters well brought up. Names his younger children Dulcibella, Edmund, Ann, John, Dorothy, and William Dunch, to each of whom he gives £2000. To son Samuel the lease of Sandford in Oxfordshire when he arrives at the age of 25 years. The said Major Dunch to take testator's cousin Humphrey Gunter for his father to consult and act by his advice, as also that of his uncle Pitman with Mr. Lancaster and Mr. Samuel Blower. Testator's personal estate and lands he had purchased, i.e., a lease of the farm called Allington in South Stoneham in Hampshire and land in the Isle of Wight, to be sold to pay the debts and the portions of the younger children. To cousin Humphrey Gunter £500. Testator's father had died about ten days next before the said 28th October 1668. To Mr. Samuel Blower £20. Servant Jane Reimer £100 for her faithful services. Testator's body to be wrapped in lead and carried to Badely and buried by late dear wife, who died about three years before this time. This was declared to be the will of the said John Dunch in the presence of the said Major Dunch, Humphrey Gunter, and other credible witnesses. A codicil dated 29 October 1668 places the management of the estate in the hands of said cousin Humphrey Gunter until testator's son Mr. Major Dunch is of age. Servants Thomas Belchamber £3; Leonard Greene £3 ; Mary Benham £5 ; to the other servants and to the servants of testator's late father 40*s*. Daughters to live with their aunt Beike and aunt Cromwell. Mr. Traye £10. Mr. Dunch of Burton in Gloucestershire £3. There is to be written on the tomb of testator and on the tomb of testator's father these words : "Si CHRISTUM DISCIS SATIS EST SI CÆTERA NESEIS." "Si Christum neseis nihil est si cætera discis." John West, who is a relation of testator, or Robert Herne and his wife, are to live at Badley in testator's house as they are very trustworthy.

Witnesses : Humphrey Gunter, Ann Beck, etc.

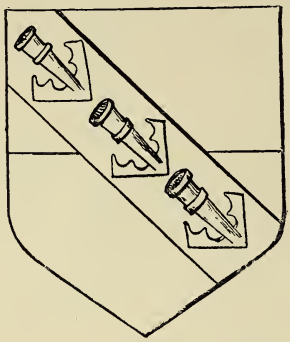
Proved 13 November 1668 by Major Dunch the son and executor. (P.C.C., 138, Hene.)

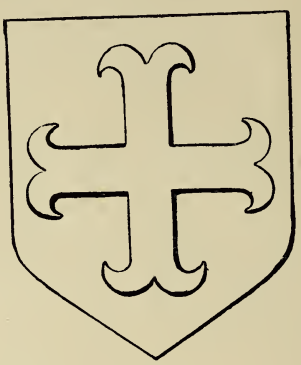
Floor-slab for Samuel Dunche, 2nd son of John Dunche, died 1 March 1673, aged 20.

The same incorrect coat is carved on this stone as on the two previous ones.

This brings us to the end of Dunch memorials.

These two shields are carved twice on the front of an ancient altar-tomb, but there is nothing else by which to identify to whom the tomb was erected.





The first of the above two shields, namely the one with the pheons, was, when the notes were taken, still existing in very old glass in the west window and in a window in the south aisle ; these glass shields supply the colours, viz., Per fess argent and gules on a bend or, three pheons azure. This resembles, with a variation of the colours, a coat given by Papworth for Lee or Leigh, viz., Azure, two bars argent, over all on a bend or, three pheons gules. There was also in the west window another coat which appears to be a variation of Lee or Leigh, that is, Argent, two bars azure a bend compony or, and of the field.

The above are all the monuments or arms in the church in or about 1870.

In the churchyard occurs the name of Zechariah Lee, son of George and Martha Lee, who died 31 Aug. 1827, aged 26. Also an inscription for Joseph Lee who died 8 February 1833, an affectionate husband and father. These may or may not be descended from an ancient gentle stock in the parish. There was also in the churchyard a memorial for Robert Thorner, gent., who died 4 September 1687, aged 77. Also for Rachel Piper, wife first of Robert Thorner and secondly of Robert Piper of Andover. She died 4 September 1724, aged . .

The will of this latter Robert Thorner is a lengthy document, but of sufficient interest to give an abstract. The will is dated 31 May 1690, the testator being styled Robert Thorner of Baddesley in the county of Southampton, gent. To wife Rachel £500, also the tenement and lands in Pitton in Wiltshire with the appurtenances for her life, and after her death the same to go to Ellis Langford, son of Harry Langford, now in Jamaica, but if he should not survive testator's said wife, then the same tenement and lands to devolve on Edward Langford of London, goldsmith. To sister Katherine Begon the interest of £100 for her life, to be paid to her by Mr. John Filer of Litton in Dorset, and at her death the £100 between her children. Niece Mary Thorner of Blackfryers in London 3*s.* a week. Wife's brother Thomas Durman 2*s.* 4*d.* per week. Wife's sister Margery Durman £10. To Mrs. Elizabeth Legay the daughter of Mr. Isaac and Katherine Legay of West Stoke, near Chichester in Sussex, £100. To the Reverend Pastor Mr. Nathaniel Robinson of Southampton £20, and to his daughters Mrs. Elizabeth and Mrs. Anne Robinson each £10 to buy a piece of plate as a remembrance. To Isaac, son of Isaac Watts of Southampton, testator's clothing and £10. To Mr. John Filer, Minister, and to Mr. Richard Meadway of Litton in Dorset, each 20*s.* for a ring. To William Sprackett of Taunton £20. To Mrs. Elizabeth Belchamber of Twickenham £10. To Hester Davis, wife of John Davis of Tichfield, £5. To Mr. Cuell of Winchester £10. To Mrs. Margaret Noyes, widow; Mrs. Cooper, widow; Jonathan Batchelor, and Jonathan Tremaine, all of Southampton, each £5. To the Congregational Church in Southampton, to which the testator belonged, £200, to the officers of the said church in trust for the use of the said church, also testator's house situate above "the Barre in Southampton," built for a meeting place for the congregation attending on the worshipp of God [and now used as such] for the remainder of the lease, so long as it be used for that purpose, but immediately after the disuse thereof testator bequeaths the same house to Mr. Nathaniel Robinson aforesaid, if he be living, and if not then to his daughter Mrs. Elizabeth Robinson, and in case of her decease then to the second son of Isaac Watts. To Havord College, New England, whereof Mr. Increase Mather is now President, £500, to be employed for the propagating of learning and piety, which sum the trustees are to pay out of lands in London after the expiration of Sir Peter Vanderputt's lease. All lands, messuages, etc., situate in London being at present of the value of £80 per annum, and after the expiration of the lease of the said Sir Peter may be £400 per annum, are left in trust to Mr. Bennett Swaine, Citizen and Fishmonger of London; Isaac Watts of Southampton, clothier; Thomas Hollis, junr., Cutler of London; and John Brackstone, clothier, of Southampton, for the following uses: £10 per annum for the said trustees to supervise testator's lands, etc., for the use and benefit of any child testator may hereafter have; £20 per annum for the maintenance of a free school in the parish of Litton in Dorsetshire, to teach male children of the said parish to read, write, cast accounts, and grammar, from the age of 6 to 15 years; to the binding out apprentices to mechanical labouring trades, such poor children of Litton, Dorchester, Southampton, and Salisbury £5 per annum and £5 for a stock to set them up at the end of their apprenticeship. Almshouses to be built within Southampton for the maintenance of poor widows, each widow to be allowed 2*s.* per week and her house room.

Witnesses: Robert Tarbuck, John Fay, Thomas Bernard.

Proved 8 December 1690 by Thomas Hollis and Bennett Swaine the executors, and further administration granted 4 June 1691 to Isaac Watts and John Brackstone, two of the trustees. (P.C.C., 211, Dyke.)

Descent in the Male Line of the Family of Grazebrook from 1065, with Proofs for each Generation.*

[Gen. 2.] William de Busli I., the eldest son of Ernaldus, succeeded his father in the 7½ knights' fees in Yorkshire and Nottingham, allotted to the younger brother out of the vast estates acquired by Rogerius, as detailed in Domesday Book. We see on pages 21 and 24 that at his uncle's death he was a married man with young children. He had married Hawisia, the eldest sister, and by the same father and mother, of Walter Espec (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, i., p. 728, l. 36[a]), and if, as we suppose, their marriage took place 1085 to 1090 their eldest son would then be only nine years old. Besides the 7½ knights' fees and other subinfeuded estates held by Ernaldus he was in possession of Wilgatuna, now Willoughton, co. Lincoln.

In the very valuable Survey of co. Lincoln, temp. Henry I. (1109)—very imperfectly printed in Hearne's "Liber Niger," 1774, vol. ii., p. 402—of which Mr. James Greenstreet published an exact facsimile in 1884, we read on plate iv., line 15: "In Wilgatuna are 3 carucates and 5 bovates and ½ a bovate which William de Bussa holds. Simon de Canci held 3 carucates and Roger de Busli 5½ bovates." This Simon de Canci held adjoining lands, and was a friend of the de Buslis and a frequent witness to their charters. The exact year of this Lincoln Survey is between 1101 and 1109 (9 Henry I.)—the original document is Cott. MS., Claudius, C. 5—and this date is of much interest to me, for it shews that William de Busli I. was alive, say 1109. He certainly died some years before the foundation of Kirkham Abbey. If he died in, say 1115, he would then be about 75 years of age.

These Wilgatuna estates do not appear among the possessions of Roger de Busli as at 1086. In Domesday Book these particular lands were divided between Walter Ingeniator and Odo Arbalistar (C. Gowen Smith's "Lincoln Domesday," pp. 196, 198). I give more particulars of this small estate, because we shall presently see that in the reign of Stephen, 25 or 30 years later, the son of de Canci and the son of William de Busli I. jointly disposed of them! One of those interesting proof-ties which I prefer to select in this very brief history: it is very concise and yet quite unanswerable—like clinching down the points of nails! My dear old Pedagogue, whose memory is still green, implanted in my early brain that great principle, "make good everything as you go along!" and I remember him with reverence and gratitude.

ESPEC.

I will now give as briefly as possible the Pedigree of Espec. It shews in the most admirable way the whole connection between William de Busli I. and Hawisia, and their sons and the several families with which they intermarried. William Espec in 1086 (Domesday Book, i., fos. 214[b] and 215) held fifteen manors in Bedfordshire, five of which have the mark of double manors. He was then an old man, and Walter Espec his son is named in that Record as holding under his father in the Hundreds of Willey, Hinwick, and Wymmington in 1086; but William the father still held in his own hands the other manors, five in Wixantree

Hundred, viz., Southill, Stanford, Wardon, Beston, and Northill, two of which were double manors. I give these names because we find Walter dealing with them afterwards, also because nearly all these lands mentioned in Domesday appear at later dates among the possessions of the descendants of Walter. The Churches and small portions of land in each were given in endowment of Wardon Abbey.

In Bideham in Flit Hundred, co. Beds (Domesday Book, i., p. 214), a Serlo de Ros occurs holding under William Espec ("Yorkshire Archæological Journal," v., p. 304, says that Serlo held lands there under both Hugh de Belcamp and William Espec), but I do not know if the De Ros family of Holderness, who afterwards married an Espec heiress, was in any way connected with this Serlo; in fact I can find nothing about the De Ros family before the marriage of Peter with Adelina de Espec (Peter is said to have died 1155—"Yorkshire Archæological Journal," vii., p. 432[n]). Fifty or sixty years afterwards, and in consequence of the great Espec estates which thus accrued to them, they became people of the highest importance. William Espec, who left surviving one son and three daughters, must have died before the year 1110.

In the year 1813 the following very early inscription was discovered in Bilsdale Church, Yorkshire, which was and is a dependency on the manor of Helmesley. It stands about ten miles distant, and is still a perpetual curacy belonging to that Parish Church: "Condidit ecclesiam Willelmus nobilis istam, Intemerate nomine Sancte Virginis Hilde." The Christian name William shews it was after the Conquest, for in the whole Cartularium Saxonicum it only occurs four times, and only once among the pre-Conquest names in the Yorkshire Domesday. This Church was given to Kirkham Priory by Walter Espec in 1122 (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1661, vol. ii., p. 105, l. 46[a]). In the Domesday Record there were three manors in Helmesley, two of which belonged to the King and one to his uterine brother, the Earl of Mortain. Therefore this inscription must have been between 1087 and 1122. Walter Espec had an uncle William, Rector of Garton and first Prior of Kirkham for only two years ("Rievaulx Chartul.," Surtees Society, vol. 83, p. 264), but the term "nobilis" was never applied to a man in holy orders. William Espec, however, held Wardon in Bedfordshire, with fifteen manors in that county, and was father of Walter Espec, who succeeded to his possessions there and elsewhere. It seems certain, therefore, that Helmesley and its dependencies, including Bilsdale, were granted by the Crown to William Espec, who built this Church as lord of the manor, and to whom succeeded his son Walter, who we find dealing with this manor in 1122 (see "Yorkshire Archæological and Topographical Journal," vol. xvi., p. 238). It is constantly stated that Helmesley was given to W. Espec by Henry I. (1100—1135) (see Burton's "Mon. Ebor.," p. 358, etc.; Lansdowne MS., No. 887; Add. MSS., Brit. Mus., No. 34,385), but does "W" stand for William or Walter? The balance of evidence would shew it was to William the father, and that it descended from him to Walter his son.

Walter Espec was in every respect a representative and remarkable man; married Aalina .... (Cotton MS., Vitellius, F. 4; and Dodsworth puts a marginal note, ? de Bello Campo, see Surtees Society, vol. 83, p. 263). Besides inheriting his father's Bedfordshire estates described in Domesday Book, 1086, and besides those Bedfordshire manors there mentioned as held by him under his father, he held in his own right under the Bishop of Lincoln "Essendine 1 hide, arable land 6 carucates, there are in demesne 2 carucates with 1 slave, and 16 villeins and 5 bordarii, who had 4 carucates. There was a mill worth 16 shillings yearly and 3 acres of meadow. The wood was 6 furlongs in length and 4 furlongs in breadth. T.R.E. was worth £4, now worth Cs. Bardi formerly held it." It was accounted in Gisleburgh Hundred, Northants (Domesday, i., p. 221; also C. Gowen Smith's "Lincolnshire Domesday," p. 261). This valuable and prosperous manor stood on the very borders of several counties; it is now counted in Rutland, and is a member of Ryhall parish, in which the Countess Judith also held lands 1½ hides. Besides Essendine, Walter also held under the Bishop of Lincoln in 1086 several adjoining manors formerly held by Bardi, viz., Lidentone, Corbi, and the soc appurtenant to Corbi in Billesfelt (now Bitchfield), in Rutland, in Lincoln, and in Northants (Domesday, i., p. 344[b] ; also Blore's "History of Rutland," p. 14).

We find Walter witnessing so early as 1085-7 the original Foundation Charter of Bardney Abbey, and among goodly company—(1) Lanfranco, Archbishop Cant. ; (2) Remigio, Bishop of Lincoln ; (3) Roberto, (4) Willelmo and (5) Henrico, sons of King William ; (6) Willelmo, Comte of Chester; (7) Roberto fil. Henrici ; (8) Roberto Bigod ; (9) Waltero de Espec ; (10) Eudone dapifers—and then this "oasis" of the aristocracy ceases. This is given in the Inspeximus copy in the Restoration Charter of the Abbey confirming their lands, and which was dated 1115 (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 142), and my greatly respected friend Mr. R. W. Eyton (Add. MS., Brit. Mus., No. 31,395, fo. 24) thought the list must have been incorrectly copied. The other witnesses were all reasonable enough, but he considered that the three sons of William I. could never have been together anywhere! I only introduced it to shew the eminent estimation in which, even at that early date, Walter Espec was held ; and, as I do not like to abandon my "oasis," will prove this by giving one or two other Charters. The Confirmation Charter to Nostell Priory, which was before 1129, by Henry I., who was himself the first witness, has (2) Turstin, Archbishop ; three Bishops ; (6) Eustace fitz John ; (7) Pagan fitz John ; (8) Walter Espec (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1660, vol. ii., p. 35). The Charter of David Rex Scotorum to the Priory of St. Trinity in London has five witnesses, of whom Walter Espec comes last ; the date is between 1128 and 1136 (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1660, vol. ii., p. 80). The Charter of Henry I. to Will'mo fil' Ulfi' Testibus (1) Roberto de Ferrariis, (2) Waltero Espec, (3) Rogero de Valoniis, (4) Fornone fil' Sigulfii apud Nottingham, before 1139 ("Archæologia," vi., p. 49. The original MS. is now in the Heralds' College, Vincent, No. 59).

I think I have really said enough to shew the high position which Walter Espec occupied. There are dozens of references where he appears.

There is on the banks of the River Tweed, nearly opposite the present town of Coldstream, a castle called Werk or Wark with the neighbouring lordship of Carram, a post of the greatest strategic value to England as the key to the approaches from Scotland. At this point nearly all the great invasions were initiated—on the west was the direct road to Carlisle, and due south Northumberland and the way to York lay open—probably the passage across Tweed was easier there.

This important lordship was committed by successive Kings to the most able and valiant commander whom they could select, and so the Barony of Werk was bestowed by Henry I. on Walter Espec for life ; and we find him in 1121 giving the Church of "Carham et unam mansuram" in Werch to the Priory of Kirkham (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1661, vol. ii., p. 105). The late Rev. W. H. Hartshorne says ("Border Fortresses ;" Archit. Inst. at Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1852, vol. ii., p. 31) that Walter Espec built a castle of great strength ; and our dates prove that at any rate he greatly added to fortifications of earlier date. He held the barony from before 1121 until the autumn of 1138, when, with the King's approval, he gave the barony for life to his nephew Jordanus de Busli, who continued to hold it till his death in 1163. I shall fully treat of him when we arrive at the Pedigree of de Busli [Family B].

In the Pipe Roll, 1130-31, we find Walter Espec and Eustace FitzJohn were then Justices Itinerant in Yorkshire and Northumberland. The coronation of Stephen in 1135 brought very perplexing times for conscientious men, and at the Battle of the Standard in 1138 Espec and FitzJohn were fighting on opposite sides! I leave my notice of that great battle until we come to the nephew Jordanus de Busli, but would like to include here what Lord Lyttelton says in his "Life of Henry II." (ed. 1767, vol. i., p. 192) as to the generals commanding there ; "But the man to whose counsels they all deferred was Walter Espec, a gallant old officer of a very extraordinary strength and stature, who, from his long experience in the art of war, joined to a most amiable and venerable character, was revered as a father, and obeyed as a general by the whole army, the chief direction and conduct of which is by some of the best contemporary writers ascribed to him." Ailred of Rievaulx in his History ascribes that great victory chiefly to the military talents and skill of Walter Espec.

Walter Espec had one only son. "In his youthful years he took to wife a certain lady named Adeline, and by her had one only child called Walter (a comely person), who took such great delight in swift horses that on a time, spurring his courser to run past his strength, he occasioned him to stumble, hard by the stone cross at Frithby, near Kirkham in Yorkshire, by means whereof the horse fell and broke his rider's neck, to the great grief of this our famous Walter Espec, his father; who thus bereft of issue, and in no small care how to dispose his estates, consulting with William his Uncle, then Rector of the church of Garton, was by him advised to make Christ his heir unto part of it, which he accordingly did by founding those three monasteries, etc." I give the simple and beautiful wording of Dugdale in his "Baronage," vol. i., p. 590. These particulars are several times given in contemporary documents. (See also "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 727.)

In the Surtees Society, vol. 83, p. 263, the "Rievaulx Chartulary" is an abstract from papers then penes the Earl of Rutland, taken from Dodsworth, lxxxv., fo. 36, almost identical with Cotton MS., Vitellius, 64, in British Museum, which was also used in Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1661, vol. ii., p. 10; and in mentioning Adelina, the wife of Walter Espec, there is a note in the margin, "de Bello Campo," supplied by Dodsworth as that lady's maiden name. There were two, possibly more, of that name de Bello Campo, in England twenty years or so after the Conquest, but very little is known of them. Of course he may have married a lady in Normandy, but I think we have very few particulars of the Beauchamps in England until 100 years after our date, although afterwards they founded a most distinguished family; but refer to p. 78, where a Hugh de Belcamp held lands in Bedfordshire under William Espec. I have a reference to Aalina de Espec ("Archæologia," xxi., p. 160), but have not that volume.

Perhaps this note (from Add. MS., Brit. Mus., fo. 24,465) may help some other student as to Bello Campo. Joseph Hunter's memorandum from the Wardon Chartulary: "Charter No. 295 [on page 59 or in pencil 37] Hugo de Bello Campo grants and confirms to the monks of Wardon de Sartis the donation which Walterus de Espec gave to them, all the land in wood and plain which lies," etc.; also "the wood of Boestone as Roeis, which was wife of Roger Burnardi, gave them." Now such grant and confirmation shew that Hugo had some hereditary connection with these lands. Dugdale (in his "Baronage," vol. i., p. 223) begins with Hugo, who had a granddaughter Rohais, who did not marry Burnardi. Still there seems a clue here. If Aalina was a Bello Campo, Walter de Espec would very likely hold her lands under them, and he did hold lands in Beston!

If, as we may reasonably suppose, Walter the son would be about fifteen years of age at his death, and that the father was in consultation with his uncle for say two or three years before he decided and began to build an Abbey, then we may safely conclude that Walter the younger was born twenty years before the first Abbey, that at Kirkham, was founded in 1121. I suggest, therefore, about 1101 or 1102; and the date, although only an approximate one, will be useful to us for comparison with other dates as we proceed. In Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1661, vol. ii., p. 105, we have the Foundation Charter of Kirkham in Yorkshire in 1121. Walter Espec and Adelina his wife, with a very long list of witnesses, which begin "Hiis Testibus Willielmo de Buyssy et Jordano de Buyssy et Rogero de Buyssy, filiis Hawisiæ sororis meæ primogenitæ Et Galfrido de Trailli et Willielmo de Trailli et Nicholao de Traylli et Gilberto de Trailli filiis Albredæ sororis meæ secundæ. Et Everardo de Roos et Roberto de Roos filiis Audelinæ sororis meæ junioris." [On folio 106 is a highly complimentary personal description of Walter Espec the father.]

In Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 729, the Foundation Charter of Rievaulx in Yorkshire in 1131 is given: "Walter Espec consilio Aalinæ uxoris meæ Testimonio etiam et concessu nepotum meorum scilt Willielmi de Busei, et Jordani, et Rogeri qui sunt filii sororis meæ Haawisiæ primogenitæ patris et matris meæ," and then, as in Kirkham, the Traillis, sons of Albrea, and de Rooses, sons of Adelina.

In Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 784, is the Confirmation only of Walter Espec's Foundation and grants to Wardon Priory, co. Bedford, Anno Domini 1135, dated at York 1 Stephen, and among "Testibus Waltero Espec et Gaufrido de Trailli et aliis omnibus nepotibus et herædibus tunc viventibus." This names "lands in Wardon and Sudgivela." Sudgivela eventually came to the Trailli family as part of their share, and here they afterwards built the caput of their Barony, and called it Yieldon Castle.

The Chartulary of Wardon is very imperfectly known. In Dugdale's "Monasticon" we have only the Confirmation by King Stephen, and a similar document granted by Richard I., 11 November 1198, with a long list of further donations of churches and granges upon the Bedfordshire estates of Espec. Beyond this I know not where to look for the original Chartulary! At the beginning of the nineteenth century it was said to be in the possession of Mr. H. B. Bright. I have enquired of the family of that name, but no one seems to know anything about it, or where it now is. In the new edition of the "Monasticon," by Bandinell, Caley, and Ellis (1817—30), is a list of Charters, merely the names with no particulars! In the British Museum (Add. MS. 24,465) is a document called "Joseph Hunter's Notes on the Wardon Chartulary," but it is only a single sheet of paper with short memoranda of 195 deeds, without witnesses or any sufficient particulars whatever. It looks like a mere memorandum-guide for some future search. However, in May 1822, Mr. Hunter lent this paper to Mr. Ellis, and he was thankful to add it to their new edition of the "Monasticon." And I feel if, with all their influence and searching in 1817, they could not recover it, then to me it seems hopeless! I therefore intend in this our present History to notice sometimes (if apt), as they come before us, estates which it can be shewn by plain records formed portions of William Espec's fifteen manors in Domesday, and came down at the division of his son's estates to his later descendants. It will, I think, consolidate our Pedigree.

I need say little more about Walter Espec. He was of a great age, yet full of vigour, at the Battle of the Standard on 22 August 1138, and survived that great and glorious day for fifteen years. Two years before his death he assumed the habit of a monk and retired to his Abbey of Rievaulx, where he died in 1153-4, and was buried there of the vii Ides of March (9 March 1153-4).

After his many great gifts to religion he left all his possessions to be divided among the children of his three sisters, so carefully set out in his Foundation Charters. Now here comes a question—Was Aalina (de Bello Campo, if that was her maiden name) an heiress and only child? As is usual her name conjointly with her husband appears in the Kirkham Deed, 1121. Rievaulx in 1131 was erected with her counsel and consent, "consilio Aalinæ uxoris meæ." We have not the Wardon Charter, 1135, but the confirmation by King Stephen mentions only Walter Espec. This Charter is dated at York "Anno Incarnationis Dominicæ 1135" [which date would cover till 25 March following] "et regni mei primo" [which year began 26 December 1135]. May we infer from this that Aalina had died between 1131 and 1135? If the actual deed was so then I should venture, because the wife's rights to dower, etc., legally required her consent to all alienations of lands.

In the Successio Dominorum de Ros (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 728, l. 39[a]) it is said that the "advowsons of both Kirkham and Rievaulx Abbeys were given to Adelina de Ros, the youngest sister," but I shall have to refer to this presently, when we come to a long and interesting suit initiated in Curiæ Regis, November 1199, and which throws a good deal of light upon family matters. The account just quoted was compounded by the monks of Rievaulx in their own favour, and with an evident determination to flatter the de Ros family, who lived at Helmesley and owned the district all round, and were Patrons of their Abbey.

Several reasons made me think that probably Hawisia, the eldest sister, was dead even before 1122, the date of Kirkham, and the gift of two advowsons, if it be true, to one of the sisters would have seemed to confirm it. I am quite sure that Walter was a great deal younger than Hawisia, and that Albreda and Adelina were somewhat younger than she, but I do not wish to leave any doubts that can be solved as to ages and their bearing upon other deductions, and so will give a few particulars to try to establish something as to Albreda de Trailli.

Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 246, supplies this curious Charter to Thorney Abbey: "Dominus Abbas Gunterus cunctique fratres Thornensis Cœnobii me Guffridū de Trailli una cum uxore mea Albretha filiisque meis Goffrido et Willielmo, immo cum tota mea sobole fraternitatis vel societatis suæ concesserunt collegam fieri, et in cunctis beneficiis suis simul secum æque perpetuo participari: unde eis bone vicissitudinis obnoxius, pro tanti beneficii adeptione ecclesiam de Giveldene cum omnibus oblatis vel offerendis et unam plenarium hidam, sanctæ et intemeratæ Virgini Mariæ et sancto Botulpho, ceterisque Sanctis fidelibus Domini ibidem pausantibus, cum decimis ejusdem villæ, in thesauro ecclesiæ, ad emptionem ornamentorum perpetua largitus sum hereditate, etc. Hujus donationis testes sunt ipse dominus Abbas Gunterus, quem per clavem ecclesiæ saisivi de prædicta possessione Radulfus de Trailli." Now Robert, the next Abbot to succeed Gunter, was installed in 1113. This was therefore eight years before the foundation of Kirkham Abbey, and Geoffrey and William the sons are mentioned, but in such a manner as to convey no idea of their age—they may have been infants just baptized. Nicholas and Gilbert are not named, and so it would seem that the third and fourth sons were not of a ponderable weight until 1121. I think my readers will consider this an interesting Charter, and the giving seisin to the Abbot through the key of the church door very realistic and naive! We can picture Gunter letting himself in and looking around—the monarch of all he surveyed. In the Kirkham and Rievaulx Charters, 1121 and 1131, we find all the four sons named by their uncle.

We now turn to "Bracton's Note Book," printed by F. W. Maitland in 1887. This is a most valuable work; some of the original Rolls quoted are no longer extant. No. 1085, at p. 107, gives the digest of a Suit in Banco, co. Bedford, Easter, 9 Henry III. (April 1225). This declares that Walter Espec, the uncle of Nicholas de Trailli the elder, had given all the advowsons of all his churches on this side Humber to Nicholas, senior, and after his death all of these were to revert to William de Busli I., nephew and heir to the said Walter, and to the heirs of the said William, and it goes on to tell us why Walter de Espec gave these to Nicholas the elder. It was "ad se sustentandum ad scolas"—to pay for his education as a priest [this was a very common arrangement; I have noted quite a number of such instances], and that the said Nicholas had died the Parson of the Church of Eyworth, and this suit arose in consequence of his death. This was one of the fifteen manors held by William de Espec in Domesday Book. Unfortunately, except in the case of Royalty, we cannot expect now to find a testament of 9 March 1154, but the above suit seventy years afterwards declares for our information how Walter disposed of some small portions of his great estates! Nicholas, senior, was the third or fourth son of Geoffrey and Albreda de Trailli. The above given curious Charter was executed before 1113, the last year of Gunter the Abbot, and Nicholas the Priest had died some time before the date of this last portion of the suit, which was 112 years after Abbot Gunter and 104 years since the foundation of Kirkham! But this involves no difficulty whatever; it only shews us that Nicholas, senior, had been born between 1113 and 1121, and must therefore have attained the age of over eighty years.

A great margin must always be allowed for delays of the Law. This suit had been initiated in 1198, and here Bracton gives us the verdict of the judges, which was reached twenty-seven years afterwards, in Easter Term, 1225, when the then Abbot of Wardon was adjudged in misericordia for a false claim!

Now let us turn to the "Rotuli Dominabus et Puellis" (Inquisitions taken in 1186 to declare wardships, reliefs, and marriages, and profits due to the King from widows and orphans being tenants in capite), published in 1830. At p. 16, Rot. iv., Bedford and Bucks, Hundred of Wickstanetre: "Maria de Trailli, who was the wife of Geoffrey de Trailli (II.), is in the King's donation, and is 40 years of age, and was nearly related (cognata) to the Earl Simon. Walter de Trailli is her son and heir, and beside him she has another son a monk, one daughter married, and one a nun. Her land, to wit, Northgile (see p. 78), is worth per annum £14." This does not give us as much information as I expected; some of these Inquisitions have many more particulars—how many pigs, sheep, etc. Geoffrey de Trailli II. had died some short time before 1185, and Maria his widow is declared to be æt. 40, that is born 1145. [But I must not press this point! These declarations are not always exact. I have in one case found another lady described in the same year as aged both 40 and 60! and we now meet with the like discrepancies when called upon to fill up the census forms.]

But this enquiry has opened out some very interesting conclusions. The de Ros family, who rose up into eminence from so great a marriage, had been largely benefitted out of the Yorkshire estates, in the midst of which stood Rievaulx and Kirkham Abbeys, and it does seem probable enough that Walter de Espec, taking his comprehensive views, should advisedly give to the youngest sister Adelina the advowson of those two neighbouring Abbeys with the barony of Helmesley. We have not at command the Chartulary of Wardon,* but his idea seems to have been to give most of the lands in Beds and Bucks to Albreda and her descendants with the barony of Wardon; and to the heirs of William de Busli I. by Hawitia his eldest sister (both of these parents having, I am sure, died some years before) he allotted Essendine and estates in Rutland and Northants, Lincoln, Beds and Bucks; while Jordanus, the favourite nephew, had the barony of Werk and Carram and other Espec estates in Northumberland and Yorkshire.

All our historians repeat the patriarchal age of Walter Espec when fighting and directing at the Battle of the Standard on 22 August 1138, and speak with astonishment of his energy and endurance notwithstanding his great weight of years.

Mr. R. W. Eyton (Add. MS. in Brit. Mus., No. 31,939, fo. 54) gives one of his careful calculations as to Walter Espec's age, but with our further evidences to compare together we arrive at these conclusions, which are accurate (within two or three years): He was born 1063, and so was 25 years old when we find him subinfeuded in his own name in the manor of Essendine in 1086 (Domesday Book, Northants); he was 75 in August 1138, and fifteen years afterwards he died and was buried on the 9th March 1153-4, at the great age of 90 years, and overwhelmed at the extent of his great possessions which had been poured down upon him by successive Sovereigns in grateful acknowledgment of the high principles and loyalty of an honourable gentleman; and which I may point out are indeed a beautiful contrast to the grasping schemes for aggrandisement by which nearly all the prominent courtiers of that age sought to enrich themselves, and to found families out of the necessities and troubles of their King, and of their neighbours, and of quondam friends.

It seems evident to me that Walter Espec gave away to his sisters, with their husbands, various estates during his early lifetime, and long before his death. But at this date, when Records such as we have in later times had not begun, or at any rate are not now extant, I can only point out as they occur that certain estates were held by certain of his descendants after his death, but cannot really shew at what dates such were given.

Immediately after his death came a flood of legal disputes—fines paid by all

* In the early Chancery Rolls at the Record Office (references, T., Roll 27, No. 35; Y., Roll 31, No. 4; G., Roll 15, Nos. 24 and 44; PP., Roll 47, No. 41; NN., Roll 45, No. 58) are five Royal Confirmations to Wardon (1199 to 1362), but they do not help us. Four of them refer to a grangia with appurtenances at Midelhow in Huntingdonshire, and were intended to patch up a faulty title.

the descendants to ensure and expedite justice, and some of them of such great amounts that they must be regarded as "Bribes"! As we proceed I can only quote a few of these. I think they begin in 1157—three years after his death. Our space is limited, and so also is the patience of my readers, therefore the masses of Record for our next fifty years must be only glanced at, and just sufficient be extracted for indisputable proof—not enough to leave that feeling of weary stupor, which always results from plethora.

This short skeleton pedigree is needed to make all perfectly distinct :—

William Espec, in Domesday Book, 1086, held fifteen manors in Bedfordshire, several of which at that date were held under him by Walter Espec his son, who we afterwards find dealing with all these manors.

1. Hawisia, the eldest dau., had married William de Busli I. long before 1121. He died about 1115, and his descendants had Essendine.

Walter Espec, the only son, married Aalina . . . .; held Essendine in 1086 under the Bishop of Lincoln, also during his father's life several of these Bedfordshire manors; buried at Rievaulx 9 March 1153-4.

2. Albreda had married Geoffry de Trailli I. before 1113. Geoffrey was dead before 1157.

3. Adelina had married Peter de Ros before 1121. He died circa 1155; buried at Rievaulx (Burton's "Mon.," p. 366).

Walter Espec, heir, only child, killed by a fall from his horse.

(A) William de Busli II., "give C marks arg' pro terra Walt' Espec portienda contra Rob' de Ros" (Pipe Roll. 1157, 4 Henry II.); witnessed Kirkham 1121, Rievaulx 1131.

(B) Jordanus, Kirkham 1121, Rievaulx 1131.

(C) Roger, Kirkham 1121, Rievaulx 1131.

[De Busli Pedigrees, A, B, and C, follow.]

1. Everard de Ros.
2. Robert de Ros, gave "1000 marks arg. pro terra Walt'i Espec" (Pipe Roll, 1157, 4 Henry II.).

[We must remember that in King Stephen's Confirmation of Wardon Abbey in 1136 occurs this clause, "omnibus nepotibus et heredibus Walteri tunc viventibus." Therefore some of them were already dead.]

1. Geoffrey de Trailli II., alive 1113; married Maria . . ., alive 1185. He gave "C marks pro eadem terra partienda scd'm id' br'" (Pipe Roll, 1157, 4 Henry II.). Died before 1185.

2. William de Trailli, alive 1113.
Gilbert.

Nicholas, a Priest of Eyworth, had died before 1198.

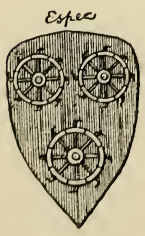
Walter de Trailli, son and heir 1185. His barony of Wardon, 1210, contained 9 knights' fees (Testa de Neville, Bucks).

Son, a monk.

Daughter, married.

Daughter, a nun.

The arms of Espec, Gules, three Catherine-wheels argent, are frequently found in those great achievements of early sixteenth century and later, especially among the De Roos quarterings. They appear carved in stone "above the string-course of two windows" at Fountains Abbey (Surtees Society, vol. 67, p. 190). Now we know that this Abbey, founded in 1132, was more or less built before 1140, for about that year a party of soldiers came to destroy it during the wars between Stephen and Matilda, and that "the church" was not built till 1204 (unless indeed this was a second building), for John of York was appointed Abbot in that year, and "immediately began the noble fabric of this church;" he died on 14 July 1209. I cannot at present declare the exact date of this particular wall, but perhaps this carving was cut within fifty years of Walter Espec's death.



On the gateway tower at Kirkham Abbey are carved ten stone shields of heraldry, being connections of the De Roos family, and No. 5 contains the three Catherine-wheels, the arms of the founder, from whose youngest sister and coheir De Ros inherited this Abbey. Of course the coat set lowest down must give us the date of execution, and so these can only have been placed there between 1316 and 1342. The Rev. W. H. Hartshorne ("Archæol. Inst. at Newcastle-on-Tyne," 1852, vol. ii., p. 172) tells us that decorating with a sheaf of arms in this fashion prevailed during the reign of Edward II. (1307—1327).

This very curtailed account of the Espec family leaves us on the very firmest possible proved foundation! We are told by contemporary Charters in 1121 and 1131 that Williame de Busli I. married Hawisia de Espec, and that they left three surviving sons, whose descendants we have now to describe, viz., (1) William de Busli II. [A], (2) Jordanus de Busli [B], and (3) Roger de Busli II. [C]. The male blood in A and B has ages ago ceased to flow, but we must give their accurate history, and will perhaps be tempted to include some later generations if they shew the descent through their heiresses of fragments of the great original estates. Space has of course to be considered, also the endurance of indulgent Readers, but such final evidences that several portions had been still continuously handed down are really valuable, and will tie the whole structure together.

Monumental Inscriptions

St. Peter-le-Poor, Old Broad St., London.*

St. Peter-le-Poor was one of the churches surviving the Fire of London in 1666, and was rebuilt in the year 1792. It was the Parish Church of the united parishes of St. Peter-le-Poor and St. Bene't Fink. This Church was demolished in the year 1907, pursuant to an Order in Council, whereby those parishes were united with the parish of St. Michael, Cornhill, and the whole of the human remains then in the vaults and beneath the site of the Church, including those re-interred there upon the rebuilding of the Church in 1792, were deposited in Ilford Cemetery, and a monument erected giving the names of those identified. A list of those names with the date of death will be found at the end of the Monumental Inscriptions, excepting those having a monument in the Church.

At each corner of the enclosure at Ilford Cemetery has been placed a vase, all of which were brought from the top of the tower of the church of St. Peter-le-Poor.

All the Memorial Tablets have been re-fixed in the Church of St. Michael in Cornhill in the City of London, except as otherwise stated.

[3] It appears from a marriage settlement bearing date 12 April 1721, that he must have found a first wife in Marianne, dau. of Samuel Le Fébure, a lady belonging, like himself, to the far-reaching Crommelin connection. Her father, a refugee merchant of Haarlem, was son of Guillaume Le Fébure and Marie Testart, and her mother, described in 1721 as a widow living in the parish of St. James's, Westminster, was Elizabeth Henriette Crommelin, born at St. Quentin in 1665, a tenth child of Samuel Crommelin and Madelaine Testart (also spelt Testard).

[4] He held the Rectory of Tingrith for forty years, his son held it for fifty-nine, and his grandson for fifty-one years, thus spanning between them exactly a century and a half.

[5] He married to his first wife, at St. Paul's, Covent Garden, on 8 Jan. 1772, Mary Hamilton, of Tingrith. His second wife, Anne Catherine . . . ., survived him.

Reviews.

The Parish Register Society of Dublin. Vols. II., III., and IV. Issued by the Society to Subscribers, 1907. Dublin: A. Thom and Co., 87 Middle Abbey Street.

THE Registers of St. Patrick, Dublin, Vol. II., begin from 1677 and end at 1800, and are edited by Dr. J. H. Bernard, the Dean, and form a volume of 118 pp. stitched up in paper cover. The whole is carefully printed, and has a full appendix besides a general index. Vol. III. gives the Registers of St. Michan, Dublin, from 1636 to 1685, the latter date being as far as they could be carried. They make just upon 300 pp.; but although the entries are all dated, the years are not noted in many places, which makes it awkward for reference. The volume is edited by Dr. Henry F. Berry, M.R.I.A., and well printed and bound in paper covers. The Registers of Provost Winter, of Trinity College, from 1650 to 1660, and the Liberties of Cashel from 1654 to 1657, form Vol. IV. and make a small Part of 64 pp. in paper covers, edited by Rev. Hugh Jackson Lawlor and Mr. James Mills; it has a good index and is excellently printed.

A Saunter through Kent with Pen and Pencil. By CHARLES IGGLESDEN. Illustrated by X. WILLIS. Ashford: Offices of the Kentish Express, 1908.

THIS is the eighth volume of this Series, and the present one is in every way worthy of support. The grouped plate at the beginning is excellently arranged, shewing five views well worth depicting, coupled as it is with a good account of Herne, with other illustrations. The next place is Hoath, with a similar plate to that of Herne and a view of Ford Manor. We have then Herne Bay, with four views, and Broomfield also with four sketches. Leeds is next given with five views shewing the Church Tower, the Old Manor House, Remains of Abbey Wall, and the Piscina at Battle Hall, besides a view of the Screen at Leeds Church; and these are followed by a plate of the Castle, shewing the Maiden's and the Curfew Towers as well as the Castle, the old Gate House, and the Ivy Tower. As our author says, 'the foundations, firm as solid rock, are no doubt the same that supported a Saxon fortress nearly 1000 years ago. The fireplace in dining room is shewn, also a key found in the Moat, and another of Ann Boleyn's casket and key. There is a view of part of Castle in 1821, also one of a medallion on the Bell at the Castle. Altogether the book is nicely got up, the illustrations are pleasing, and the price of only 2*s.* 6*d.* places it within the reach of all lovers of Kentish scenery, and the binding in French grey gives another charm to the book.

The Journal of the Ex Libris Society. Vol. XVIII., Parts 1 to 5, for January to May 1908. London: A. and C. Black, Soho Square.

THE Part for January begins well with a plate designed for Mr. Aug. F. Amman by Mr. F. G. House, and is a good example of this artist's work. There is also the bookplate of the Ettrick Family, coupled with that of the Rev. J. Slade Maughan, who married a granddaughter of the Rev. William Ettrick; there is also given an account of the family. The bookplate of Mr. T. S. G. R. Aikman by Mr. Graham Johnston, of the Lyon Office, Edinburgh, is shewn, also that of Mr. John Ballinger, Librarian of the Cardiff Libraries, and designed by Mr. Goscombe John, A.R.A., and the drawing by Mr. T. E. Harrison, both shewing great taste and originality. The plate of the Rev. G. Angus is well done by Mr. T. Moring, and Mr. and Mrs. Berens' is also given. The whole forms an excellent Part.

The February Part has a plate of Mr. F. E. Coe by Mr. Ern Hill, depicting the owner in his library reading at an open window, with his dog by his side, and there is a novel group of visiting cards shewn as a separate plate. There are also five Lancashire bookplates given for memorial prizes, besides some Jamaica samples.

The Parts for March and April shew a good plate of Sir Alfred J. Newton's, also one for Mr. Harry Newbolt, M.A., the author of Sea poems, and another for Mr. Charles F. Newcombe, the Librarian of the Camberwell Library. As a separate plate the arms of Viscount Iveagh are given, well designed by Ulster King of Arms; and the plate for the Droitwich Brine Baths Hotel is given, also those for Mr. Robert Steele Lewis, Mr. Edward Powell, and Mr. A. T. Quiller-Couch, the well-known author.

In the May Part there is given the plate of Mr. Percy N. Barnett, also two Leigh bookplates and four Milton plates, and Mr. Clement Shorter's and Mr. Francis J. Tennant, both well done, also a delicately engraved plate signed Gwendolen Peek. There are eight Festoon bookplates shewn, besides two for identification numbered up to 625, 626. This is also a good varied Part.

Genealogical History

OF

THE FAMILY OF WHITAKER.

By ROBERT SANDERSON WHITAKER.

In addition to the Family of Whitaker, this Work comprises copious Historical Notices and Pedigrees of the families of Ingham, Brooke, Tidswell, Sanderson, Blakiston, Jeans, Bennett, and other alliances.

"The editor or compiler gives a short introduction in which he refers to the value of family and personal records, and to the manner in which the old family Bible has frequently done good service; but he points out that the space given in the Bible was so limited that some permanent and expansive system seemed necessary and desirable. In addition to several pedigrees and a mass of information collected and arranged by Mr. Whitaker, we find a number of armorial plates, coloured and plain, executed by Mr. Arthur J. Jewers, whose ability as a herald and genealogist are well known. The coloured plates are as follows: Arms of Whitaker of Hesley; Arms of Whitaker of Pylewell; Arms of Ingham of Marton, Sugwas, and Blake Hall, Arms of Sanderson; Arms of Blakiston; Arms of Bennett. The other illustrations include Hesley Hall; a portrait of Sarah Whitaker, about 1758; Grayshot Hall, and Villa Sofia, Palermo. There are besides about sixty shields of arms inserted in the text. . . . . These two or three items will give an idea of the value of this record of a most important family and its immediate connections, as set forth in this book of one hundred pages, beautifully printed, sumptuously turned out of hand, and copiously illustrated, as are all the books which are issued from the Wardour Press."—Ex Libris Journal, January 1908.

EXTRACTED FROM THE EXETER DISTRICT PROBATE REGISTRY.

1708, Nov. 22. Adm'on of the goods of William Dugdale of Colliton Rawley, Devon, but who died in the royal ship called "The Antelope," was granted out of the Court of the Archdeacon of Exeter, to Grace, his relict, of Colliton Rawley.

Bond by said relict and John Farrant of Colliton Rawley, Tailor, in £30, dated same day. Both made their marks.

Inventory (if any) wanting, but value of estate sworn as under £20.

Can any of your readers inform me to what family the above belonged? Henry Dugdale of Bury Pomeroy (will proved 1590), mentioned in the London Visitation 1633 as of Codford, eldest son of Sir John Dugdale, and brother of Christopher, the first Seend Dugdale, had sons John and Henry.

Seend, Melksham.

ARTHUR SCHOMBERG.

Descent in the Male Line of the Family of Grazebrook from 1065, with Proofs for each Generation.*

[A. Gen. 3.] William de Bussew, Bulli, or Busli II., the eldest son of William de Busli I. by Hawisia the eldest daughter of William Espec, and sister and coheir of Walter Espec, at his death on the 9th March 1154, witnessed the Foundation Charters of Kirkham 1121 and Rievaulx 1131. At p. 24 we have shewn that he was born about 1090, and so would be 9 years old at his grandfather's death in 1099 and 31 at the date of Kirkham; and if we suppose that his father William I. died about 1115 he would then be 25 years old, and 41 at the date of Rievaulx.

For the sake of perfect distinctness, I must here explain that under the Law of Esnecy—Latinized into "Jus Esnecia"—viz., the right of the eldest son to decide which share he would take, William II. chose that which came through his mother; and so the various estates now to be named under Family A were all originally de Espec property. And we see William de Busli II., de Trailli, and de Ros contending together in the Legal Records which I am now about to quote.

The de Busli estates, the 7½ knights' fees of Ernaldus, as well as large subinfeudations under other chief lords, all descended to the joint occupation of Jordanus and Roger, his younger brothers, with the exception of course of the Barony of Wark and those other lands which had been given by Walter de Espec during his lifetime to Jordanus. This will be abundantly shewn and proved when we come to discuss the two branches B and C.

William de Busli II. appears as lord of Essendine 5 Henry II. (1158) (Wright's "Rutland," 1684, p. 62; Blore's "Rutland," 1811, p. 14). In the same year (1157-8) (Pipe Roll, rot. 4, m. 2, 4 Henry II.)—"Bucks and Beds. Willus de Buissei redd̄ comp̄ de C. m̃ arg̃ pro tra Walti Espec partienda contra Rob̄ de Ros. In th̄ L. m̃ arg̃. Et debet L. m. arg̃, secundem bř cancell̄." To shew the quarrels that arose on the division of Walter Espec's extensive possessions, I give two more abstracts: "Gauffr̄ de Trailli redd̄ comp̄ de C. m̃ arg̃ pro ead̄ tra partienda. In th̄ L. m̃ arg̃. Et del L. m̃ arg̃ scdm id̄ bř." These follow each other in the Roll, shewing us that de Busli and de Trailli were acting together; and a little further on in the same year we have: "Everwicser. Rob̄t de Ross redd̄ comp̄ de M. m̃ arg̃ pro tra Walti Espec. In soltis p̄ bř Regis Willo Cade, C. m̃ arg̃ et debet DCCCC. m̃ arg̃." This wording is for the whole of the Yorkshire estates. In the next year, 1158-9 (5 Henry II.), William de Busli II. pays, in the same terms, £16 13*s.* 4*d.*, the exact amount of 50 marks; but the Pipe Roll Society, vol. i., p. 19 (1158-9), represent that he still owed a like sum, and in their vol. ii., p. 37 (1159-60), he paid £16 13*s.* 4*d.* under the heading "Northants, Bucks, and Beds"—"In th̄ lib̄ avit Et Q. est." I give this, although it seems to me to be an error, because I may learn some day that he found it was for his interest to do so, or I may get some further light as to the division of the Espec estates! [Madox, "Hist. of Exchequer," pp. 347, 355 (ed. 1711), mentions only two payments, viz., in 4 and 6 Henry II.] In the "Red Book of the Exchequer," by Hubert Hall, p. 34 (anno 1161-2), William de Busli II. paid for "V. m̃" in Bucks and Beds, and in the Pipe Roll for the same year (8 Henry II.) the Sheriff returns Bucks and Beds "de Scutag̃ Willi de Bussei. In th̄ V. m̃," shewing that he held there five knights' fees. It seems to me probable that there was no dispute as to these other lands in Rutland (then called Northants) and Bedfordshire. He also paid in Lincolnshire in this same year (8 Henry II., Pipe Roll, 1161-2) (Mr. Round in "Genealogist" for 1892, p. 77, but I cannot find it in my own copy).

William de Busli II. was dead before 1165. I may just as well give a few earlier notices. They are far too numerous for our space, but I select just a few, which convey something beyond his mere existence! Robert son of Ilbert de Lasey restored Nostell Priory (Dugdale's "Monasticon," ed. 1661, vol. ii., p. 34, l. 28), and the fourth witness to the original Charter was our William de Builli II.; and this Charter was confirmed by Henry I. between 1120 and 1129. And now as to the date of the original? Robert de Laci was in possession of his lordship of Pontefract in 1090. He was an unruly subject, and was banished in 1121 and died in 1130. We are therefore certain that the Restoration Charter was a year or two before 1120—that is, four or five years after the death of William de Busli I.

The Charter to Kirkstall Abbey by another Robert de Lacy (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 862, l. 28[b]) is witnessed by Osbert the Archdeacon and (fourth in the list) William de Bulli II. Osbert the Archdeacon held that dignity from 1140 till 1147, when he was murdered, so this Charter is between those two dates.

Foundation Charter of Newburgh Abbey in 1145 by Roger de Molbray, among Testibus Willielmo de Busci II. (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1661, vol. ii., p. 190. l. 59[b]). The de Mowbrays had been his chief lords jure uxoris, through the marriage with Adeliza, widow of Henry I. I cannot find the date of her death.

Charter of Jordan Folioth to Pontefract Priory in 1159-60 (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 656, l. 50[a]), fourth witness William de Bulli II.; among the other witnesses, "Osbert Archidiacono tunc dapifero Hugonis de Tilli." [Osbert was Archdeacon 1153—1166 and occurs as dapifer 1160. See "Pontefract Chartulary," p. 118, Charter 89.]

I have mentioned above that William de Busli II. died before 1165, and we have this interesting confirmation in the "Liber Niger," 1166, p. 260: In "Carta Roberti Lincolniensis Episcopi de militibus," etc., veteri feoffamento .... "Filius Willelmi de Buissent vj milites." William II. was just lately dead; one of his sons must succeed, but which? A little way down this List of the Bishops' Estates (p. 261) we find "Hugo de Buissent" holding in his own right iii milites. This Hugh seems to be one of the Lancashire branch. We find his name spelled Bussei, Busli, Bulli, etc., and he held lands in Lincolnshire, in Brocton, Notts, and Torp in Suffolk, as well as Lancashire, from 1147 to 1206. The "Rotuli Dominabus et Puellis" (p. 21) tells us that his daughter Ida married William de Schirinton and hath lands in Muleshoe in Beds. He is there spelled Bulli, so the above strange spelling, "Buissent" (if not one of Hearne's errors) must be a freak of the scribe! In "Rotuli de Oblatis et Finibus," 1835, p. 33, he is called "Hugo Bussell of Penwortham, Lancashire," and he pays a fine for a plea de mort d'ancestor, also for letters of seisin of lands in Brocton and Torp; this was in 1199. I have gone out of my way to correct this strange spelling, but there is an interest beyond this. At p. 313, Vol. II., I have mentioned the subinfeuding of the younger sons of Ernaldus (also of other followers who came over to them from Normandy) in the vast estates of Roger de Busli I., not only in the 600 square miles "inter Ripam et Mersam," but all over England. This land at Torp in Suffolk was the gift of Gue, sister of Ranulph de Glanville—"of the fee of Richard Bussell"—who occurs at Penwortham.

William de Busli II. married Roesia or Rose, the daughter of Baldwin fitz Gilbert. The old pedigrees have it "Gilbert de Gant," but as pointed out by Thomas Blore ("History of Rutland," 1811, p. 14) it was really Baldwin fitz Gilbert "de Clare," and he gives the references to Dugdale's "Baronage," vol. i., p. 455, and shews that in the same volume, at p. 207, the same Charter is used for the family of de Clare! He also gives in a footnote the Charter to Thorney Abbey (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 245), "Adeliza uxor Gilberti filii Ricardi, et Gilbert et Walterus et Baldwinus et Rohaisia pueri [children] Gilberti," etc. "Notum sit vobis me concessisse et liberos meos," etc. "Hiis Testibus Gilberto filio Gilberti, Gualterio, Herveo, Baldwino fratribus ejus et Rohaisia sorore eorum." So our Roesia was the daughter of Baldwin, the fourth son of Gilbert de Clare. Mr. J. H. Round has since pointed out the same error ("Geoffrey de Mandeville," p. 148).

Considering the great, almost insuperable difficulties thrown in the way of our early genealogists, we cannot wonder at occasional errors! All the evidences were then in MS. and scattered about in many depositories, where, only as a great favour and by the payment of heavy fees, they were allowed to copy—when they had at length discovered where the records were! It is a very different thing now, with accumulating calendars and many original documents printed verbatim to refer to! I am often lost in admiration at the skill—and it seems an intuitive gift!—which enabled them to unravel intricacies, and, as we see with our present wealth of records, with wonderful correctness. This exactness of historical reference and deduction seems to have started from the labours of Dodsworth and Dugdale—before them a mere "ipse dixit" was accepted!

We now come to a very interesting record, "Rotuli de Dominabus et Puellis," printed by Mr. Stacey Grimaldi in 1830, from a transcript (Harleian MS., No. 624). "The existence of the original Rolls had not then been discovered;" their date was 31 Henry II. (1185). Inquisitions taken about that year as to wardships, reliefs, and other profits which ought to have been paid to the King; and although these were made up to that year, they surely covered a period of many years before the date named, as we usually find with such enquiries, and they include twelve counties. This being of great interest to me as a family record, also because Selden, fo. 831, calls the original Roll "De Dominabus et de Valectis et Puellis," etc. [quoted in Cowell's "Interpreter," under "Valect"] I had a search made and found the original documents in the Record Office (reference K.R. Knights' Fees, Bundle 1, No. 2). Here is the account of the widow of William de Busli II., so far as related to her Lincolnshire estates, at p. 6: "Kalsenwath Wapentake, Roeisia de Bussei, who was the daughter of Baldewin filius Gileberti and wife of William de Bussei, is in the gift of the Lord the King, and is 50 years of age, and has two daughters, of whom the elder has in marriage John de Builli, and the other Hugo Wake by the King's permission. Her heritage in Mortone is worth £15 a year if cum instauramento [replenished!], with 3 ploughs and 200 sheep. The land which she now holds there is worth £4, and her two daughters hold the overplus, and other men who hold by her service." And in "Rutland" (p. 23), "Roeisia de Bussey, who was the daughter of Baldewin, son of Gilbert, is in donation of the Lord the King, and is 40 years of age. Her land in Issendene is worth £10, if with this instauramento, viz^{t}, 3 ploughs, 100 sheep, but 100 sheep are wanting. She has received 10 marcas from [the profits of] her woods within these 8 years and 20 shillings 'de placea' [that is, from rent of a house or piece of land]. She has two daughters, her heirs; one is the wife of Hugo Wak, the other of John de Bulli." Harl. No. 624 is an exact and verbatim copy.

Now, at what date could such an Inquisition be correctly given? She has then only two daughters her coheirs, but she had borne to William de Busli II. two sons, Bartholomew and Walter, in addition to these two daughters. Now, William de Busli II. died before 1164-5, and Rose his widow had very soon after married Baldwin Buelot, who, in the "Liber Niger," 1166, at p. 217, declares that he holds the Barony of Wardon with 5 knights' fees (jure uxoris). And accordingly, his father being now dead, we find in the Pipe Roll, 24 Henry II., rot. 1 (1177), that under Pleas in the Exchequer at Lincoln, "Baldwin Wac redd̄ comp̄ de 850 m̄ pro fine facto int̄ ipm̄ and Bartholomew de Busli" (Madox Exchequer, 1711, p. 143); and again, 26 Henry II., rot. 4 (1178-9), Baldwin pays a further instalment, but still owes £416. These were for the division of the estate of William de Buli II.

This very slow process goes on for years. In the great Roll of the Pipe for 1 Richard I. (1189-90), at p. 57 Lincoln, Baldwin Wac still owes £132 13*s.* 4*d.* "pro fine inter ipsum et Bartholomew de Busli," and in the Pipe Roll, 3 John (1201-2), p. 166, the very same wording appears and the same money still owing! So far this shews us that, as the father had to enlist the Law in order to recover from De Ros in p. 106, so Bartholomew the son, some time before 1177, had to institute his plea in the Court of Exchequer; and this further shews us that of course the father, William II., was then dead, and our other evidences prove that that had taken place about and shortly before 1165. So we see that, if the judgment in the Exchequer was originally obtained in say the year 1167, Bartholomew had been receiving his verdict by dribblets for ten years when we give our first abstract in 24 Henry II. (1177). These dates also shew us that Walter, the elder son of William II. and Rose, had died before 1167, and Bartholomew thus became the only son, and continued his plea against Baldwin Wac; and, still further, that the deed to St. Andrew's, Northampton, during widowhood must be dated 1164 or 1165. And, in further confirmation of this, I refer to Baldwin Buelot's Charter to the Monks of St. Andrew—"his wife Roheys concedente et heredibus Willi de Bussei, Bartholomeo et ceteris"—that is the daughters and only surviving son, who was so far s.p. This second Charter occurs on folio 62[a] of the Northampton Chartulary, and that of Rohese on folio 63[b]. I ought perhaps to mention that one of the conditions of Baldwin Buelot's Charter is that the Monks of St. Andrew's should send a resident chaplain, who should serve the chapel in Esendine. This chartulary has been terribly charred by fire, but is still distinctly readable!

It seems from these enquiries as if the Inquisition as it appears in the Rotuli de Dominabus et Puellis could only have applied to the years 1164 or 1165, and that the King immediately appointed to her a suitable husband in Baldwin Buelot, and that the commission, according to the Royal breve, declared the whole transaction, and that we must not be misled by the date 1184! The following two Charters will be of interest as bearing upon this question. The original Chartulary of St. Andrew, Northants [Brit. Mus. Reg. 11, B ix., on fol. 63[b]]: Know, etc., that I, Rohes de bosey for the health of my soul and that of my lord William de bosey and my children (filiorum, including sons and daughters) give to the Monks of St. Andrew of Northampton xii acres of my demesne and the tythe of Eels "in campis de Esenden, etc., hanc donacōm et lib'tatē," Walter my son laid upon the altar of the blessed Andrew, and I confirm the same with my seal, etc. Therefore she had a short interval of widowhood when Walter the elder son of William de Busli II. was still alive! The second charter runs thus—Sciant, etc., that I, Baldewinus Buelot, with the consent of my wife Roheys and the heirs of Will'i de Bussei, Bartholomew, and the others [this looks as if Bartholomew was the only surviving son] give to the Monks of St. Andrew's of Northampton xii acres of my demesne in "hesendene" (particulars where they lie, etc.), pro Salute (salvation ?) of my soul and of my wife and my children (above mentioned), also of William de Bussey and all our ancestors and successors. I cannot recognize any witness which would give us a date, but Mr. Eyton (Itinerary of Henry II., p. 202) gives the following interesting particulars: On 25 May 1176 the King's Council appointed four ambassadors to Sicily, two of which were Baldwin Buelot and Richard de Camvill; other particulars are given. They set out from Southampton on or about 31 May and reached Panormus about 5 August 1176, but Richard de Camvill and Baldwin Buelot did not live to return home! My readers will now see why I thought that these Inquisitions must be the accumulations of many years; but at the inscribed date, 1184 or 86, Roeisa de Busli had been for ten years a widow for the second time, and the only item which is full and accurate is that of her four children, the two daughters only remained alive. Of course Bartholomew de Busli's name was still used as representing the results of an important Suit in the Exchequer, and not as a living man! But we must watch this point when we now go over the Curia Regis suit.

On trying to arrange the confused and fragmentary notes given in Rotuli Curiæ Regis of this trial, the Abbot of Wardon against each member of the family of William de Busli II., concerning the advowson of the church of Eyeworth, Beds, I found so much had been omitted in the Record that I had to fall back upon Bracton's "Note Book," printed by Mr. F. W. Maitland in 1887 (afterwards Professor). The trial began in September 1199 in Curiæ Regis, and as usual was passed on to the Banco Court, and was not concluded until 1225! Banco Roll, Easter 9 Henry III. (1225), Bedfordshire: "A jury to make recognition if Bartholomew, son and heir of William de Bussey II., had presented Nicholas de Trally, who died the last parson of the church of Eyworthe, or not" (in a suit in which the Abbot of Wardon claimed the advowson versus Thomas de Gravenel and Joan his wife and the Prioress of St. Elen of London). The jury found that Bartholomew had not presented the said Nicholas, but Nicholas the father of the same Nicholas had given him the church to maintain him at the schools (ad scolas), and they say that Walter Espec, the uncle of Nicholas the elder, gave the advowsons of all his churches on this side of the Humber to the said Nicholas the elder, with a proviso that after the death of the said Nicholas the said advowsons should revert to William de Bussey II., nephew and heir of the said Walter; but the said William died before the said Nicholas, and therefore the advowsons should revert to the heirs of the said William.

And the said Prioress then produced the deed of Matildis de Bussey, by which she had given to the church of St. Elen of London and the nuns serving there all the land, houses, and rents which she held in the vill of Eywrth, saving the maritagium of Joan the daughter of Matildis.* And because Walter Espec had given to the said Nicholas the elder the said advowson, together with other advowsons, William de Bussey II. had no seisin of the advowson, inasmuch as he died before Nicholas, and Matildis and her sister Cecilia (awaited) expectaverunt the death of the said Nicholas, and the advowson should revert to them according to the finding of the jury. It is considered that the Abbot of Wardon has no claim—and because the said Thomas (de Gravenel) and Joan hold only half of the vill, by an exchange with Robert de Veteriponte and Joan his wife, the coparceners of the wife of the said Thomas, and so hold half of the said advowson—and the said Thomas and Joan state they hold 100 shillings of land in the said vill as a marriage portion of the gift of the said Matildis, and do not shew that she had given the advowson, and there is no mention of half the advowson in said gift, and the said Matildis had given all her residue of the moiety of the vill to the Prioress. It is considered that Thomas and Joan should recover the half of the advowson and the Prioress the other half, and letters to that effect be transmitted to the Bishop. This careful abstract was very kindly made for me in 1888 by my friend General the Hon. Geo. Wrottesley, who further remarked that the Roll referred to by Bracton is no longer extant!

The Abbot's pleadings bring in all the members of the family under his several summonses; and as entries in the Abbreviatio Placitorum [Rec. Com., 1811, folio] shew, the Rot. Curiæ Regis does not give all that passed, inasmuch as after reaching a certain stage the case was sent down to be tried in Banco.

Two interesting Records:—

Placitorum Abbreviatio, 1 John (1199), Rot. 15, p. 23; also Rot. Curiæ Regis, "Nov. 1199," vol. ii., p. 99: "The Abbot of Wardon claimed against Matilda de Bussey the advowson of the church of Wardon, and says he holds the charter of William de Bussey, father of said Matilda, granting the same. Matilda answers that William her father never had possession, and so could not grant it, because Walter Espec gave the advowson to Nicholas de Trailli, and that she and her sister are heirs apparent to the said Walter Espec."

* Excerpta e Rot. Finium, vol. i., p. 18. "Bucks, 1218. Thomas Gravenel had married without licence from the King one of the daughters of Matildis de Bissai in Boeland, but having paid his fine, the Sheriff of Bucks was to return the same."

Placitorum Abbreviatio, p. 32, 2 John (1200-1): "The Abbot of Wardon claimed against William de Colevill and Beatrice his wife the church of Wardon as the gift of William de Bussey, whose charter he put forward in evidence. William and Beatrice say they have no claim in that church except 'dotem ex dono.' Bartholomew, who was the son of William de Bussey," and that Cecilia his sister is wife of John de Builly. [Original Roll, Rot. 27 dorso.]

These shew that the Abbot submitted as proof an impossible Charter, because William de Busli never was in possession! Again, he uses this false Charter against William de Colevill and Beatrice his wife, and their answer was that their only claim is for dower by the gift of Bartholomew, son of the said William. Therefore this Beatrice was formerly wife of Bartholomew, son of William, without issue surviving, and had long before 1200 remarried William de Colevill. The Court decided that the Abbot's claim was a false one and himself in misericordia.

Bartholomew was certainly dead long before this trial was initiated in 1199, but I cannot give the exact year of his death. He was alive and consented when Baldwin Buelot made that charter to St. Andrew's in Northampton. The King had no Fines to recover except from the daughters, and so the sons are quite ignored in the Inquisition, and the two daughters appear as heirs of Rohesia, and she was a widow for the second time, Baldwin having died in 1176, and the King's Commissioners were only required to know these facts. This reconciles Baldwin's Charters and all the other points. Now here is an exactly similar instance. Who would suppose that Joan who married Thomas de Gravenel above was at that time the widow of Alanus de Munby? But it was so [refer to Excerpta e Rot. Fin., vol. i., p. 21], and in the same way Rohesia still used her first husband's illustrious surname of de Busli, and the Rot. Dom. et puellis takes no notice of her last husband (by whom she had had no children and who was then dead). The breve for a Commission set down exactly what was required, and the officials dare not deviate a hair's breadth.

Cecilia brought Essendine (Rutland) to John de Bully with many other lands in Bucks and Beds and Lincolnshire. Matilda brought lands in Beds and Bucks, Lincoln and elsewhere, to Hugh Wake.

We see, therefore, that Branch A ended in these two daughters, of whom the elder married John de Busli. We shall see more of him under Branch B. Now let us see what became of all the vast possessions of Walter Espec. It is the most extraordinary transaction I ever examined, and so I give the wording of the actual documents:—

[Rot. Chartarum in turr. London asservati, vol. i., p. 32^{b}. Corrected from the original.]

"Confirmation to Robert de Ros.

"John by the grace of God, etc. Know ye that we concede and confirm to Robert de Ros and his heirs that whole honor which was of Walter Espec to hold of us and our heirs as freely and fully as Walter Espec, 'plenius et melius tenuit,' in the time of King Henry ['avi patris nostri'] the grandfather of our father [that is Henry I., who reigned 1100 to 1135], so that the said Robert de Ros shall be obliged thereout to give to William de Bussey xxx librates of land, and to Geoffrey de Treilly xxx librates, and to Jordan de Bussey L Librates of land in Northumberland of the honor of Carrham, and after the death of the said Jordan the said L librates to revert to Robert de Ros and his heirs.

"Wherefor I wish and confirm 'prout' (in such a manner) that the aforesaid Robert de Ros and his heirs, the whole honor which was of Walter Espec in Northumberland and elsewhere as well as those xxx librates of land which William de Bussey had there with v Knights' Fees, and besides those xxx librates of land which Gauffr de Treilli had there with v Knights' Fees, that they may hold of us and our heirs 'bene et in pace et libere et quiete et integre et honorifice,' in wood and plain, in meadows and pastures, in roads and ways, in pools and mills, in vivariis and fisheries, and free of all claims in burgo, et extra, et in oñib3 reb3 with socc. and sac. and tol. and them. and infeñ, and with all liberties and easements pertaining by custom to that honor, as the Charter of King Henry our father (Henry II. 1154—1189) reasonably witnesseth. Testes G. Ebor. Arch̃, Wiłło M. Coñ de penbroc, W. Coñ Sar., etc. Given by the hands of S. Weł Archdeacon apud Lexov̄, vj die Jan^{y} in the first year of our reign (1200)."

The first part declares the early holdings as they had been divided by Walter Espec for the benefit of his heirs. So far I have not been able to find any such charter of Henry II., to whom King John attributes the ill intentions which he now executes. This Robert de Ros of Helmesley (called Fursan) in 11 Henry III. (1226-7) gave to his younger son Robert the Castle and Barony of Wark.

[A] PEDIGREE. (See pp. 106—111.)

William de Busli II., born about 1090; about 25 years old at his father's death; witnessed Kirkham 1121. Rievaulx 1131; chose his mother's estates, and was Baron of Wardon with 5 knights' fees; Lord of Essendine 1158; entered a plea against de Ros for Espec's lands in 1157-8. Died 1163-4 (before 1165), aged about 70.

= Roesia, da. of Baldwin, fil. Gilberti de Clare [formerly called de Gant]. She held Essendine, Rutland, and Morton in Lincolnshire.

= She married 2ndly Baldwin Buelot, about 1164, who held the Barony of Wardon "jure uxoris" 1166, and died in Sicily in 1176. Pipe Roll, 1164-5. "Bucks and Beds, Baldwin Buelot R. C. de £7 12^{s} 6^{d}." Charters to St. Andrew's, Northampton:—

(a) Rohese, 1164-5, laid on the altar by Walter her son.

(b) Baldwin de Buelot, by leave of Rohais and the heirs of William de Busli, Bartholomew, and others, after 1166.

Walter, elder son, was dead before 1167, which was about two years after his father, and s.p. In 28 Hen. II. (1181-2) John de Busli and Hugh Wake paid up the debts on his and his brother's lands in Rutland, Bucks, and Beds.

Bartholomew, 2nd son. Baldwin Wake fined in a plea between him and Bartholomew 1177, which goes on for years. He married Beatrice . . ., but died s.p. sometime before 1184. In 1201 the widow and her 2nd husband, Wm. de Colevill, claimed lands and advowson in Wardon as her "dotem ex dono Bartholomew."

Cecilia, eldest da. and coheir; married John de Buslei, the heir of family B, before 1164-5. She was lady of Essendine, etc.

Matildis, 2nd da. and coheir; married before 1164-5 Hugh Wach. She gave one moiety of Eyeworth to St. Elen of London, and the other moiety to her daughter Joan.

The Pipe Roll, 1181-2, quoted below, shews us that Matilda must have very lately become a widow at the date of the Inquisition taken in 1184. =

Baldwin Wake, fined 850 m' in a plea between him and Bartholomew in 1177, a great part of which was still owing in 1189; he died 1201.

Joan had married before 1218 Thomas Gravenel; she had previously married Alanus de Munby, but had no issue by him.

Excerpta e Rot. Fin., m. 10, 9 November 1218. "Thomas de Cravenel finem fecit xx m' because he had married, without the King's licence, Johanna who had been the wife of Alanus de Munby, which lands they held of Matild' de Bussay, mother of the said Johanne." And the next generation—

Excerpta e Rot. Fin., 22 February 1247. "Joh'es de Gravenel fil. et her. Johannæ de Munby for ½ Knight's Fee which the said Johanna held of the King in capite in Eyeworth."

In Ralph Thoresby's Diary, under date 25 Jan. 1709, he says: "Peter le Neve, Norroy, had then in his keeping in the Exchequer the original Domesday Book, which he was to see free—the fees for which would otherwise surmount my attempts, being a noble for producing the book, and 10 groats for every line transcribed; that equals 6^{s} 8^{d} for a sight of the book and 3^{s} 4^{d} for every line copied. So I have not at all exaggerated the difficulties of our Early Historians."

I think these additional Records will help us to unravel dates for Walter and Bartholomew :—

Pipe Roll, 25 Henry II. (1178-9). "Rotel. Misericordia Regis pro forestam. Walt'us de Bussei 7 pleg' eius deb c li pro fratre sue requir. in Bucks et dim̃ m̃ de Buzzelei pro defectu" [damage to Brushwood].

Pipe Roll, 1179-80—1180-1. Same repeated, required in Rutland.

Pipe Roll, 1181-2 (28 Henry II.). "Bucks and Beds, Hugh Wak 7 Johs de Builli R. C. de C. li de debito Walt'i de Buissei pro fine t̃re In thro xii li 7 ij^{s} 7 viij^{d} per manū Johis Builli. Et in pdon̄ p b̃ R ip̃i Johi xxvij li 7 xvij solid. 7 iiij^{d} p b̃ Ranū de Glanvile p b̃ Rę de ult^{a}mare. Et ip̃i hug' L li per b̃ Reg. E. Q. E."

We may read the above excerpts thus: 1178-9. Walter de Bussei for the fine on his lands in Rutland with as pledge (or security) Bartholomew his brother.

Walter had Essendine as well as lands in Bucks and Beds, etc.; but in 1181-2 (or rather the previous year) Walter and Barth. being both dead s.p., and the two brothers-in-law having succeeded to all these estates, contrived to clear their property by the small payment into the Treasury and these pardons per breve Regis. I might have supposed that Bartholomew had been lately slain in the King's service, but I have no evidence! And it seems to have been a period of profound peace. Henry II. embarked at Portsmouth on 15 April 1180 for Normandy, having appointed Ranulf de Glanvill High Justice, and returned to Portsmouth 26 July 1181. (Glanvill, who was Sheriff of Yorkshire, was a friend; see p. 107.)

(26.) Christopher Tothill, 2nd son, "a respectable citizen of Exeter," was buried 24 August (St. Bartholomew's Day) 1637 in the New Cemetery of the Friernhay, Exeter, called St. Bartholomew's Cemetery, which was consecrated and opened on that day by Bishop Joseph Hall. In this cemetery now stands the Church of Allhallows-on-the-Walls. Christopher Tothill married Alice, daughter of . . . .; she was buried 22 October 1644 in Exeter Cathedral. White of Vurly in the parish of Membury, near Chard, Somersetshire, and Jessie Holden his wife. This Joan was sister to Richard White of Axminster, Dorsetshire. (39.) Christopher Tuthill, 2nd son, born* 24 June 1650 at Minehead in Somersetshire. Owing to the troubled state of the counties of Somerset and Devon after the Monmouth Rebellion and Judge Jeffreys' Bloody Assize he came to Ireland as a merchant, embarking in the "Happy Return" at Minehead, and landing on Sunday 30 August 1685 at Youghal, co. Cork, where he settled ; was sworn Bailiff* of Youghal 29 June 1690 by the English, and again by the Irish on 29 Sep. 1690. In September* 1691 he carried important dispatches from the officer commanding the English Camp at Castlemartyr to the English Fleet off Kinsaile. On his coming to the beach and making signals a boat was lowered and he was taken on board H.M.S. "The Duke of Grafton," Captain Haddock, Commander. The Fleet then weighed anchor and set sail to lay siege to Cork ; during the action an officer at his side was killed by a round shot. By indenture of lease dated 11 September 1691 Robert Ball, Mayor, Bartholomew Seymor, and Christopher Tuthill, Bailiffs, did let and set unto Alderman Richard Yeates the lands called the Blackbog of Youghal for the term of thirty-one years ; this lease was assigned and made over by the said Richard Yeates unto Christopher Tuthill, dated 1 October 1692, which he assigned on 30 December 1697 to his two sons John and George equally. Genealogical Notes and Queries.

Brodrick.

["Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Second Series, Vol. II., p. 364; Vol. IV., p. 297.]

The following is in addition to what is stated in the Brodrick Pedigree: Sir Alan Brodrick was the eldest son of Sir Thomas Brodrick by Catherine Nicholas his wife; matriculated at Magdalen Hall 29 November 1639, æt. 16, M.A. 9 Sep. 1661; Barrister-at-Law of Gray's Inn 1648; Knighted 1 August 1660; M.P. for Dungarvan 1661 and Orford 1660—1679.

His funeral sermon was preached at Wandsworth on Thursday, 25 November 1680, by Nathaniel Resbury, M.A., minister of the same place, and Chaplain to the Earl of Anglesea, Lord Privy Seal; afterwards printed by Kettilby in 1681, with a Dedication to "Sir S^{t} John Broderick, K^{t}, and the Rest of the Worthy Relatives of .... deceased." From this we learn that there were false rumours "of his living or dying in the Romish Faith"; and had he recovered, had resolved to give "the world a publick account in his own unmatchable way of thinking and expression, the sentiments he had of Religion both as to the Faith and Practice of it .... his bulky vertue bore no proportion to his little stature." He consulted the Scriptures, especially the Psalms, for which he had a great veneration, every day. "His Lineage in a long Series of Worthy and Honorable Ancestry, who from time immemorial had liv'd in the Registry of Honour in the Northern parts, till his own Father, by the occasion of a noble trust, viz., the Lieutenancy of the Tower of London, came to add warmth to our Southern clime," followed by a panegyric of his understanding, learning, and judgment, his knowledge of anatomy, poetry, history, and divinity. He attended every day at the prayers of the Church, and by a stated allowance procured that they should be every day performed, giving twelve pence to be every morning distributed amongst the poor that are present there. In politics he attached himself to Lord Clarendon, and made no small figure in the administration. Sometime before his death he made a voluntary retreat from his business and preferments, burning all his papers that had any relation with politics or business of State.

Reviews.

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record. Vol. XXXIX., Nos. 2 and 3 for April and July 1908. New York : 226 West 58th Street.

The April Part has an excellent portrait of Samuel Ward King, the Governor of the State of Rhode Island, with a full account of him by Mr. George Austin Morrison, LL.B. The Skillmans and the Greene and Knickerbocker Families' genealogies are all continued, as well as the Records of the United Brethren Congregation in Staten Island. The Marriages in the County of Dutchess and Records of Southold, both of New York, are also fully given, making the whole Part rich in genealogical researches.

The Portrait of Major-General Hopper Striker serves as a frontispiece to the July Part, with a good account of him by Hopper S. Mott. The Records of the United Brethren Congregation are still continued, likewise the genealogies of the Knickerbocker and Greene Families. Notes relating to the English ancestors of the Youngs of Southold and the Sands Family, N.Y., are interesting, and the Part concludes with an Obituary and Society's Proceedings.

* Communicated by ARTHUR F. G. LEVESON GOWER, Esq., F.S.A.

Register of Freemen of the City of London in the Reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. Translated and Edited with an Introduction, etc., by CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A. Issued by the London and Middlesex Archæological Society for 1908.

THIS Register of 150 pp. is just issued by the Middlesex Archæological Society, and is carefully edited by Mr. Charles Welch, the late Guildhall Library Secretary. He gives a good Introduction, mentioning how a fire occurred in the apartments of the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall on 7 February 1786, when the registers and books of Admissions of Freemen of the City of London were destroyed. As the Editor observes, and which we have had occasion several times to mention, it suggests the necessity of putting such documents beyond the reach of destruction by having transcripts made of them and printed for future reference. Mr. Curtis, formerly a member of the City Council, generously paid the cost of the transcript of the Register. It is also mentioned that this MS. was given by C. W. Hick, Esq., for many years Sword-bearer to the Lord Mayor, who bought it as a relict of the fire in the Chamberlain's Office when he was only 21 years old, and he died in 1859 at the advanced age of 94.

The information Mr. Welch favours us with is worth noting, as he states the MS. consisted only of thirty leaves much shrunken with fire, both margins being burnt, and holes made in some of the leaves. The text is so damaged and the vellum is so shrunk that the writing is in contorted shapes, and almost undecipherable.

The book contains a record of admissions to the Freedom of the City, with the fees and fines paid. The entries are in Latin, which are translated by the Editor as they appear.

The second MS. seems to have been in private hands until 1896, when it was bought at public auction for the Guildhall Library : it is in very inferior condition, and consists of only twenty-one loose vellum leaves, each about $11\frac{7}{8}$ inches by $7\frac{1}{4}$. The Rev. Joseph Hunter states that it was bought about 1849 by the Rev. Henry Cross of Bucks at an old curiosity shop.

This is as far as Mr. Welch carries it in his Introduction, and the List of Freemen then commences in the year 1546, and the names of all Freemen are carried to 7 Edward VI.

The Work is edited with great care, and is a worthy record of the work done by the London and Middlesex Archæological Society, under the able editorship of its accomplished Editor. The Work concludes with a full Index of Names, and the period being from Henry VIII. to Edward VI., finds his successor in name as King Edward VII. in 1901. We should have preferred to have seen the volume bound in cloth.

Fenland Notes and Queries. Vol. VII., Parts 77 and 78. April and July 1908. Edited by Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. Peterborough : George C. Caster, Market Place.

THERE are two notes in the April number that will be of interest to Genealogists, viz. : Some notes extracted from Coles MSS. relating largely to persons holding property in Leverington. The earliest extract is 1290-91, and the latest 1775. A list of Rectors of Leverington Church has also been compiled therefrom, dating from 1334—1721. The other note consists of a specimen of the Churchwardens' Accounts of Leverington, given in extenso, drawn up 3 October 1518, in which are references to over fifty different persons, a majority of whom paid various amounts for "ferm of lond." A good illustration, giving a view of "The Greenland Fishery, King's Lynn," serves as a frontispiece.

There is a feature in the July Part that will appeal to those interested in Heraldry, being an illustration of the Arms and Escutcheons of Mary, Queen of Scots, formerly hanging in Peterborough Cathedral until 1643, when the Parliamentary Army quartered in that City pulled them down, defaced and tore them. The illustration was redrawn from the notebook of Nicholas Charles, Lancaster Herald, who made an heraldic tour in 1610.

There are also some extracts from wills taken from Dr. Sharpe's "Calendar of Wills proved in the Court of Hustings, London, 1258—1688," relating to persons or places in the Fenland, which will be of use to those interested in the families of that district.

Charlton, near Woolwich, Kent. Published by Mr. Charles North, Blackheath. 1908.

Mr. Leonard Morgan May, 960 Shooter's Hill Road, Blackheath, is to be congratulated upon the issue of a volume bearing the above title, containing full and complete copies of all the Inscriptions in the Old Parish Church and Churchyard, together with Notes on the History of the Manor and of the Families connected with the place.

There is a View of the Churchyard by Mr. T. N. Dinwiddy, A.R.I.B.A. The absence of an Index Nominum is explained by the arrangement of the surnames alphabetically. There is an Index Locorum.

The volume is one of a limited issue of 150 copies, and will form a very agreeable addition to the shelves of those who are interested in that district, to whom we commend it.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. No. 4, Vol. XV., for April, and No. 1, Vol. XVI. for July 1908. Published by the Virginia Historical Society, Richmond, U.S.A.

The April Part contains some interesting letters of Roger Atkinson in 1769—76. There are also given copies of Petitions from the Governor to the King in 1625-6 as well as the Journals of Virginia in 1737—1763, and Virginia Legislative Papers from April 1766, besides Virginia Gleanings in England, all of which are interesting. The Historical Notes and Queries, and a Pedigree of Bishop Robinson's Family, with the Genealogy of the Brent and Brooke Families, and Reviews and Index, conclude the Part.

The July Part contains the Journals of the Council of Virginia 1737—1763, also Petitions and Proclamations in Virginia in 1626—1667, and the Legislative Papers issued in 1776. The Revolutionary Army Orders in 1788 and Gleanings in England are both continued, and are interesting in their details. We have more of the genealogy of the Brent and Brooke Families, and the genealogy of Bishop John Robinson, afterwards Bishop of London in 1723, given with his portrait taken at Fulham, concludes the Part.

The Journal of the Ex Libris Society. Vol. XVIII., Parts 6 and 7, June and July 1908. London: A. and C. Black, Soho Square.

One of the principal items in the June Part is "The Grimaldis and some Grimaldi Bookplates," consisting of short genealogical and historical notes of that family, and illustrated with several of their armorial bookplates. There are also papers on "Hints on Bookplate Collecting," by the Secretary and Editor of the Ex Libris Society, and a continuation of the "List of Legal Bookplates." The frontispiece is a photogravure of a recent plate designed by Mr. Graham Johnston for Mr. F. C. Beazley, F.S.A., which is excellent, and the plate of Mr. John Harold Greig by Miss Mary C. Lawson shews up well in a darkish brown tint.

The July Number contains an interesting article on "Some Colonial Bookplates," giving particulars of some members of the families of Byam, Martin, and Mathew, all of the Island of Antigua. The article is illustrated by reproductions of their bookplates.

Another paper deals with the Bookplates of J. Skinner of Bath, giving a list of his known plates, with reproductions of seven examples.

Genealogical History

OF

THE FAMILY OF WHITAKER.

By ROBERT SANDERSON WHITAKER.

In addition to the Family of Whitaker, this Work comprises copious Historical Notices and Pedigrees of the families of Ingham, Brooke, Tidswell, Sanderson, Blakiston, Jeans, Bennett, and other alliances.

"The editor or compiler gives a short introduction in which he refers to the value of family and personal records, and to the manner in which the old family Bible has frequently done good service; but he points out that the space given in the Bible was so limited that some permanent and expansive system seemed necessary and desirable. In addition to several pedigrees and a mass of information collected and arranged by Mr. Whitaker, we find a number of armorial plates, coloured and plain, executed by Mr. Arthur J. Jewers, whose ability as a herald and genealogist are well known. The coloured plates are as follows: Arms of Whitaker of Hesley; Arms of Whitaker of Pylewell; Arms of Ingham of Marton, Sugwas, and Blake Hall; Arms of Sanderson; Arms of Blakiston; Arms of Bennett. The other illustrations include Hesley Hall; a portrait of Sarah Whitaker, about 1758; Grayshot Hall, and Villa Sofia, Palermo. There are besides about sixty shields of arms inserted in the text. . . . . These two or three items will give an idea of the value of this record of a most important family and its immediate connections, as set forth in this book of one hundred pages, beautifully printed, sumptuously turned out of hand, and copiously illustrated, as are all the books which are issued from the Wardour Press."—Ex Libris Journal, January 1908.

Register of Freemen of the City of London

IN THE REIGNS OF HENRY VIII. AND EDWARD VI.

Translated and Edited, with an Introduction and Index,

By CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A.,

Honorary Secretary of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society, etc.

The MS. from which this Register was collected was burnt in a fire which occurred in the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall in February 1786, it being lost with a matchless series of documents illustrating the condition and progress of trade within the City. The volume represents all that is known to exist of the Registers of Freemen. The principal document is the Egerton MS. 2408 in the British Museum, purchased by the Trustees in 1877. The MS. consisted only of thirty leaves, the margins being burnt on all sides, and holes through some of the leaves. The second MS. was bought at public auction in 1896 by the Guildhall Library, having been previously purchased by the Rev. Henry Cross in 1849 at an old curiosity shop.

The Work has been very carefully edited by Mr. Charles Welch, and in giving an Admission by Apprenticeship in Latin he appends to it a translation. Where a cook wanted to purchase he had to pay £20, but admission by apprenticeship was 14*s.* 10*d.*, whereas those by patrimony ranged from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 15*s.* 4*d.* The total sum is given on each page, and where the names are not decipherable blank dots are inserted. Every care has been taken to ensure accuracy, and the Editor is to be congratulated on rescuing such an important document from oblivion.

1759, March 19. MARY, dau. of GEORGE and MARY WARD, bapt.

[Her parents were buried in Mount Nod, where is their M.I. George Ward died 7 Sep. 1777, aged 49 (he was Sheriff of Surrey 1776), and Mary Ward died 4 Oct. 1780, aged 51.]

Descent in the Male Line of the Family of Grazebrook from 1065, with Proofs for each Generation.*

[B. Gen. 3.] Jordanus de Busli, second son of William de Bussei I. by his wife Hawisia, eldest daughter of William Espec, who was coheiress of Walter Espec, her brother, at his death 9 March 1154, was born (pp. 24, 84) in or about 1091, and was a witness to Kirkham Foundation 1121 and to Rievaulx 1131. In 1131 we find him giving in endowment of Rievaulx half a carucate of land at Boltun "quam tenet Ailsi Russel," as they held that land which my uncle Walter Espec gave to them, "ad hospitandum fratres eorum" ("Rievaulx Chartulary," Surtees Society, vol. 83, p. 61); also in the Pipe Roll of the same year, "Jordanus de Buisli redd cõpot de iiij li." in Notts and Derby ("Mag. Rot.," 31 Henry I., 1131, p. 9), and under Yorkshire and Northumberland he received in pardon from the King "i. m̃ arg̃" (idem, p. 28).

He was the favourite nephew of Walter Espec, and became a most distinguished military leader in following the instructions of his uncle, who placed him as Castellan of his Barony of Wark and Carrham, which we have already noticed (p. 79), as a fortress of the utmost importance, because it commanded the readiest entrance for invasions from Scotland, and therefore was entrusted to the care of the ablest and most vigilant General who could be found. On the 10th of January 1138, before dawn, William, son of Duncan, nephew of David, King of Scotland, "poured part of the army which he commanded around the town of Wark, but in vain attempted to storm and carry it. King David, coming with a larger train with catapults and many engines of war, besieged the town in great force for three weeks; but Jordan de Bussey, nephew of Walter Espec, the commander of the garrison, by the unyielding courage of the minds of his men, set at nought and rendered useless all the King's endeavours, for they slew the King's standard-bearer and every day many others. King David, therefore, appointing some to press the siege, sent on William, the son of Duncan, with the Scots into Northumberland." ("Chron. John of Hexham," Stevenson, p. 7. Sir Roger Twysden's "Decem Scriptores" under 1138, p. 259, line 15, "Jurdanus vero de Bussei nepos Walteri Espec," quoting from Simeon of Durham.)

In the following April King David conducted a further army into Northumberland. "After this the garrison made a sally from Wark and seized the King's servants and carriages with provisions, driving these off into the town. But also making an attack upon the King's son Henry and his escort they killed some, and some they wounded or carried off for ransom. The King, annoyed at this, punished them by a renewal of the siege, destroying their crops in the fields and cutting off all relief."

Richard of Hexham (Stevenson, p. 42) gives his own shorter account of the above after their first attack on 10 January. He goes on to say: "The King himself and his son Henry arrived with a further reinforcement, and applying the whole strength of their resources attempted to carry the town [of Wark] by various assaults with battering machines and other implements, and after that laid siege to it for three weeks. Yet he gained no advantage, but, on the contrary, every attempt proved injurious to himself, for the knights and others who were in the fortress, most ably defending themselves and the town, killed his standard-bearer and many others of his men under his own eyes, and wounded many more. The King, perceiving the inutility of his efforts, and the many and daily increasing losses to himself and his troops, at length raised the siege, and rushed with his whole force to devastate Northumberland." In May Richard of Hexham (p. 46) tells us "the soldiers, sallying from the town of Wark, seized under their walls King David's supplies, which had to pass close by them, together with the waggons and attendants. The King, excessively enraged at this, hastened with his whole force to besiege them, and by batteries and all the means in his power he again proceeded to assail it. But by God's blessing all his endeavours fell frustrated. Many of his men were wounded and disabled and some slain; likewise, in the conflicts which before this siege had been fought with the King's son Henry, some were killed, others wounded or taken prisoners and ransom received for them, while of the garrison only one knight had been killed .... The King then, perceiving that his attempts upon the town were useless, caused the crops to be consumed on the ground, and then levying from his own country, etc., a larger force than ever before, he united his troops into one body." That means that he gave up in despair all hopes of taking Wark, and took his whole army away with him, except two Scottish Barons with a small containing force to check the sallies and excursions of the garrison. I may also add that Eustace fitz John, a powerful Baron of England who held the Castle of Alnwick, had turned traitor, and at this juncture invited the Scots and promised to join them with all his strength. (See what already said of him at p. 79). Roger de Hoveden, Anno 1138, calls him a "one-eyed vile traitor," but some chroniclers say he fell under the unjust suspicion of King Stephen, and so took offence.

By these abstracts we are able to see how, about the end of June 1138, Jordanus de Busli, finding that his enemies had abandoned in despair their attempts to take his castle, and realizing that his services were now more wanted elsewhere to help his aged uncle and the other leaders against an army said to be 60,000 Scots, left Wark with its garrison, "imbued with his own indomitable valour," under the command of a Captain whom he could trust, to hold it against everything—short of famine—and, eluding the besieging force, hastened to join Walter Espec, Turstin, Archbishop of York, and all the great nobles of Yorkshire, who were organizing what force they could gather to oppose the Scottish armies.

Turstin had the heart of a hero in a body helpless from age and infirmities. He had to be carried about in a litter by his attendants, and yet he aroused by his spirited appeals all the great nobles, who flocked to his support. King Stephen was detained in the west, stamping out revolution among his own subjects, and could only send a small detachment under Bernard de Baliol for their encouragement in Yorkshire; and with all their endeavours a mere handful could be gathered together to check this immense invading army, which was perpetrating the most brutal atrocities. Churches, houses, crops, everything that could be burned was destroyed, everything living butchered—they spared neither young nor old! But instead of intimidating the English and Normans these reports only aroused such feelings of hatred and revenge that great numbers of yeomen appeared unbidden to help the nobility at their rendezvous at York, each man armed with his bow and arrows two cubits long, and all had a reputation for archery. Many came even from Lincoln, Notts, and Derbyshire. It seems to have been a spontaneous levy en masse, and we shall see the results in the ensuing battle.

In the Acts of Stephen (p. 47) we are told that the Scottish regular army, at its first gathering, consisted of more than 26,000 knights and soldiers, but hordes of barbarians in immense numbers joined it afterwards—30,000 is spoken of. This could only have been a guess, but when we consider the dead left on the field, besides the unknown numbers scattered about and slain, and that a certain residue still did get back to their own country, that may not be so greatly exaggerated. I have not found in any of the chronicles any estimate of the number of the English knights who fought together on that glorious day, but certainly they were a mere handful—a few thousand—not one-tenth of those Scottish hordes hurled against them. A great many priests and church dignitaries accompanied them, and no doubt impressed all with a deep sense of religious confidence, and there was the plentiful supply of skilful archers. Their total force, however, was so insignificant that they had to form as a solid phalanx, while their savage assailants swarmed over the country, and were able to attack at any point where there seemed a possible weakness. (Roger de Hoveden, p. 233.)

By the able arrangements of Walter Espec and Jordan the knights had dismounted, their horses being sent away into the rear in charge of a few servants, and the mailed knights were arranged like a surrounding wall of steel, and scattered about among them stood their plentiful supply of archers, while in the middle was erected a lofty standard containing the most venerated saintly relics and surrounded by attendant priests, and so they awaited the attack of the enemy. As a last hope Bernard de Baliol and Robert de Bruce, the valued vassals and friends of both the kings, for they held estates under both, had gone over to try if, even at the last moment, a peace could not be agreed to, but King David found he could not control his own savage army flushed with plunder and success. These two knights therefore, when all arguments and persuasion failed, withdrew their homage from him and returned to their own little camp. On the morning of the 22nd August 1138 the whole district was wrapped in a thick fog, through which appeared these two returning messengers for peace, who were thus able to announce to King Stephen's little band that the enemy was approaching and close at their heels—a most timely warning, for they could see nothing! All the arrangements were at once carried out, and hardly were they completed before thousands of half-naked savages hurled themselves upon their spears! There were, apparently, about 30,000 Galwegians and others of the fiercest tribes gathered throughout Scotland —splendid men, of dauntless valour, armed with darts, very long thin spears, and great swords to be taken to whenever the line should be broken, but they found that iron wall everywhere impregnable! Their darts could not pierce the coats of mail, and their long spears broke harmlessly against them, while the plentiful supply of English archers shot them wherever they chose, sometimes in the face, but mostly through and through their naked bodies. For three hours these heroic savages persisted in their attacks, but finding then that they could make no impression, they abandoned their other weapons and took to their great swords, but these too proved useless. Thousands had been killed or grievously wounded, and they had not yet made one victim, and then their leader, the Chief of Lothian, was slain, shot through with an arrow, and a sudden panic seized them. Everyone flung away his arms and took to precipitate flight. Most of them turned in a southerly direction, away from their own country; others fled through the ranks of the Scottish chivalry, a finely organized and regular army, and thus communicated the panic to them. These then quickly dispersed in terror, and in a very short time his body-guard had to compel King David to seek safety for himself in flight, lest he too should be made prisoner.

But the English were in no condition to pursue their victory. Early in the battle Prince Henry, David's son, and the Rupert of those times, had swept round far into the rear and discovered and dispersed their horses, and so they could only advance to take possession of the Scottish camp, thus recovering immense booty collected during the invasion. David fled to Carlisle; his armies were dispersed in every direction, and not until three days after could Prince Henry himself reach him there, and with nothing but his horse. He had had to abandon armour and everything to conceal his nationality and save his life, for the enraged inhabitants slew every Scot they could find.

Now let us turn to the Galwegians. Their dead left on the field amounted to 10,000 (Roger Wendover, p. 489), some chroniclers say 12,000 bodies, besides many found hidden in cornfields and woods. The rest, scattered in small parties and mostly towards the south, were killed a few at a time wherever they were found. In some cases two bands which had kept together met, and furiously fell upon each other, each accusing the other of having lost the battle, and so it is supposed that only a very small remnant could ever have got back to their native land. It is right to explain that King David was not master in his own army, more than one half of which consisted of these boastful and ignorant savages, who claimed as a right that they should open the battle, and much against his own judgment he was obliged to concede them this honour, or else, full of petty pride and jealousy, they would certainly have turned their arms against their own king.

I must confess that I hang over the details of this battle with the deepest pride and admiration. To me it is perhaps the most perfect example of calm, determined, moral bravery recorded, even in our own glorious history. A small handful, a few thousands only, strong in the patriotic necessity, and fortified by deep religious convictions; knowing too, for they were well acquainted with war, that it must end in the hopeless slaughter of every one of them. We know from their solemn vows before the battle that every individual looked forward to certain death. Why, Thermopylæ itself was not more splendid. DUTY was clear, and all hope equally excluded. Those few splendid Greeks, immortalized in all history, had the convictions and valour of the fatalist. Both equally had their loves and earthly ties, but to our English the future was no "mist." They entered upon that hopeless conflict with the certainty of the Christian before them, and their whole and only confidence in religious TRUST.

We now know how all was ordered, but they could only expect inevitable death, and when this great battle was over and the invaders scattered, it was found that very few were even wounded, and only one knight, the brother of Gilbert de Lacy, killed (Roger de Hoveden at p. 234). I have collated and condensed all the contemporary chronicles for my account of this battle; they are very voluminous, while modern writers do not sufficiently notice an event which had far-reaching results in the history of England.

We must now return to the castle of Wark and its second siege. So soon as King David had recovered some of his scattered troops he determined to wreak his vengeance on the town and castle of Wark, which had for the whole of the year 1138 so terribly hindered his supplies, and that position also no doubt helped him to secure stragglers seeking their way back to Scotland. About the second week of September he drew together all his forces and sat down before Wark, determined to try new engines and every device to obtain possession of it. Richard of Hexham (Acts of Stephen, p. 51) almost repeats the words used for the earlier siege. The garrison and townsmen destroyed his engines, killed in various ways several of the king's men and wounded many, with the loss of only one of their own soldiers, who, confident of his own valour, had stayed too long to demolish one of the king's engines, and so was cut off and slain by a multitude of Scotch. At last, seeing all his endeavours ineffectual and damaging only to himself and his troops, he relinquished the assault and enforced a strict blockade.

About this time Alberic, Bishop of Ostia and Legate of Pope Innocent, arrived in these parts and was able to arrange a temporary peace between the two nations, but from which was expressly exempted the town and castle of Wark! A few days after this arrangement was come to King David ascertained that the garrison and town were reduced to the utmost straits of famine. They had salted down and eaten all but one of their horses, but yet they refused to surrender, and were determined when that too was eaten to sally forth and cut their way through if possible! But Walter Espec too had heard this report, and sent his orders through the Bishop that they should deliver up his castle to the King of Scotland. The Bishop then mediated for the King's clemency, who gave the garrison twenty-five horses and allowed them to march out with their arms. The Bishop then departed southwards, on 29 September 1138. Does not this mean that the garrison which had withstood the prolonged assaults of the whole Scottish Army consisted of only twenty-five men? I think we can read it in no other way, and that the King of Scotland was only too glad to give horses to remove foes whose valour he must have chivalrously admired!

John, Prior of Hexham, writing at the time (November 1138), says of the Castle of Wark: "There was found in it nothing left to eat, except one live horse and another in salt. The King bestowed on them 24 horses and dismissed them in freedom with their arms, but the town he utterly destroyed" (Stevenson's "Church Historians," vol. iv., part 1, p. 9). In the same volume, at p. 55 ("The Acts of Stephen"), Richard of Hexham, who became Prior in 1143, writes: "About the feast of St. Martin, 11 November 1138, William, Abbot of Rievaulx, came into that province, and, on the part of Walter Espec, to whom as beforesaid the town belonged, charged them to yield it to the King of Scotland, for he was well aware how woefully they were reduced by famine. The King thereupon, by the mediation of the Abbot, gave them 25 horses and allowed them to march out with their arms." We have seen that one knight only had been slain during this second siege. Richard, without doubt, knew that twenty-five knights composed the original garrison, and forgot so many years afterwards that a dead man would not require a horse. At that date it was easy to build a castle impregnable against anything but famine, but that necessitated a small number of defenders. It is described as on a very steep mount, and therefore catapults and battering-rams could hardly be brought to bear upon it. That the garrison was ample is shewn by their astonishing achievements outside the walls. Probably, for the same reasons, we find many castles mentioned as held by a few—sixteen or eighteen knights.

I think so romantic a history surrounds this castle, that it is worth quoting what Thomas Gumble, D.D., says of it in his "Life of General Monk," ed. 1671, p. 165. The troops were lying at Coldstream December 1659, and of course the officers went over to inspect the ruins of Wark, "nothing but old walls—all did wonder at the policy of its demolition .... we found it had been strong, but very small and incapacious for any considerable party." The Pipe Rolls, 1159—1161 shew large payments for rebuilding (and the "Chronica Mailros," at p. 9, says "restrengthened"), but Gumble's account shews that, even if these had restored and even increased its dimensions, the ruins shewed that at all times it must have been but a very small place, and its garrison .... splendid heroes!

In 1150 Odo de Boltebia grants lands in Boltby to Rievaulx Hiis Testibus, Walter de Espec, Jordanus de Bussei, Roger, Abbot of Byland (Chartulary Surtees Soc., vol. 83, p. 45). Roger was Abbot from 1142 to 1196, and Walter Espec died 1154, so I am able to date this about 1150.

In 1153 the great convention between King Stephen and Henry son of Matilda and afterwards King Henry II., stipulated that Roger de Lucy should hold the castle of Oxford, and Jordanus de Busli the firm of Lincoln (Rymer's "Fœdera," vol. i, p. 13 . . ; Chronicon Johannis Bromton, in Twysden's "Decem Scriptores," p. 1039, line 17 ; and the exact wording of the document is given in Lyttleton's "Hist. of Henry II., ed. 1767, vol. i, p. 539).

In the Pipe Rolls, 1155-6 (2 Henry II., p. 26, rot. 5, m. 2 ; also "Red Book of Exchequer," p. 676), are two entries under Yorkshire, "Compotum de Nova Firma et Jordanus de Buissei et Roger frater ejus, xxvj li. et xiij s. et iiij d." ; and again, at p. 28, rot. 5, m. 1, dorso, Yorkshire : "Et id̄ Vic̄ red̄ Comp̄ de LX li numero de firma de Burc et de Chanardesburc. In t̄n XL li. Et in lib. at̄ Jord̄ de Buissei et Rog̃i fr̄is sui xx li E.Q.E."

The first of these two entries is thus explained : Owing to their eldest brother William de Bussei II. having elected, under the law called "Esneca," to succeed to his mother's estates, Jordanus the second son, and Roger III. his younger brother, under that arrangement on Walter Espec's death in March 1154 inherited jointly the original 7½ knights' fees held in capite of the honour of Tickhill, and both were "Barones de Blida," and accordingly the Sheriff of Yorkshire had received from Jordan and Roger III. his brother during the first year of Henry II., which extended from 19 December 1154 to 18 December 1155, this very large sum which was their Relevium on the change of ownership, and by it we see that the original 7½ fees from gradual diminutions were then accepted as only 5 feoda and one-third of a knight's fee, which at £5 per knight's fee amounts to £26 13*s.* 4*d.* And accordingly we find in the Pipe Roll for the next year, 3 Henry II., the taxes paid in 1155-6, Yorkshire Bertram de Bulmer the Sheriff red̄ compot̄ "et Jordano de Buisseio et Rog'o fratri ejus X. m̃ arg̃ p̄ br̄ Reg," and henceforth that these estates were to be taken as 5 knights' fees only and charged as was customary at 2 m̃ annually for each knight's fee.

Under the next generation I will give an instance of sub-dividing the burthen of knight's service among several manors.

Now as to the second entry, which is on quite a different part of the Pipe Roll for 1155-6, which shew the payments for the year ending 18 December 1155. I may as well explain here that "nova firma" when used means taxes due within the exact previous year ; any old balances are always described as "vetus." We see here that Jordan and Roger in the year 1155 held the forest of Burc and Knaresborough at the yearly rent of £60 (numero). It was their freehold so long as this rent was paid, but if that failed it returned to the king. Now these forests, the boundaries of which are known to the present day, were over 20 miles in length from east to west, and in some places 8 miles in breadth. A survey, made about 1613, with view to enclosure, shews that they then contained 28,151 acres, and when they came to be enclosed years afterwards by Act of Parliament in 1770, the area actually taken amounted to 28,000 acres (Hargroves' "Knaresborough," ed. 1798, pp. 111, 116). Knowing all this, and that Walter Espec died 1154, I have gone so exactly into the year dates because the question presents itself—can these forests have been a part of the Espec estates, or were they newly acquired by Jordan and Roger ? The pannage and perquisites must have been very valuable, and at that time £60 was a very large sum. The firm of Burc and Knaresborough continues to occur constantly in the Pipe Rolls, and after 5 Henry II., 1158-9, the rental becomes lxiiij li numero, and the sheriff then began to account for it annually, but with no tenant's name given.

I conclude, therefore, that someone else had offered more and got the concession. After 1160-1 portions of this forest appear under terris datis—lands taken away from the forest and granted out—and so the total rentals came into the exchequer but under several headings for the different tenants. When we find no notice of taxes paid it would, in ordinary cases, shew that the owner had gone to the wars and done his feudal service in person. Payments "per br̄ Regis" were for extra services, overdone, or for reward, or in pardon and release of what was due, or in acknowledgment of payments already made, perhaps indirectly, by orders from the king ; all such were allowed in reduction of what was due. Lastly "numero" means that the money was counted out, and not either weighed or blanched, a very heavy difference.

Referring to the firm of Lincoln committed to Jordanus by the convention in 1153 (see 155) it is interesting to find in the Pipe Roll of 3 Henry II. (1156-7), rot. 4, m. 1, "Cives Lincoln R. C. de xxvj li 7 vi f. 7 viii d. de vet'i firma, et id cives redd. Comp de nova firma (that is for the year 1155-6); et Jordanus de Buissei xxvj li per br Regis" (that is had already been paid out by him on the king's writ).

In the Pipe Roll, 1160-1, rot. 4, m. 1, dorso "Northumberland Jord de Buisseio redd. comp de X. m." (Red Book of Exchequer says "for 11 milit," p. 698).

Pipe Roll, 1161-2, Northumberland de Scutag Jord de Bussei 11 m (Red Book of Exchequer, 2 milit, p. 32).

Pipe Roll, 1162-3, Lincolnshire L. s. de t'ra Jord de Buissei. E. Q. E.

But we learn a great deal more from these Pipe Rolls. Walter Espec was buried on the 9 March 1154. William de Busli II. then claimed under the law of Esnecy his mother's share, just fallen in, of the Espec estates, and in consequence we see Jordan and Roger the younger, brothers of William II., coming into possession of the 6 (or $7\frac{1}{2}$) knights' fees, held in capite of the honour of Tickhill from the time of the Conquest, and hence in the Pipe Rolls for 1155-6, also for 1156-7, Jordan de Busli and Roger his brother conjointly holding, and they pay what was due "nova firma" for the years 1154-5 and 1155-6, after which date Jordan held them alone, as Roger III. had died during the 3rd year of Henry II., which regnal year extended from 19 December 1155 to 18 December 1156.

Jordanus however goes on paying for the whole of these estates until 9 Henry II. (1162-3), when Jordan was dead. The Barony of Wark and Carham held for his life then returned into the king's hands, and accordingly in Pipe Roll, 9 Henry II., which covers payments due 19 December 1161 till 18 December 1162, on rot. 7, memb. 1, dorso, the restauramentum of his barony (before it should be granted out again, it was the duty of the sheriff to see that the king's manors within his bailiwick had been properly re-stocked and in repair). As this is a sort of curiosity, and is very fully detailed in the original record, I give this copy: "Postel (an official named elsewhere in these Rolls) R'. C'. de firma t're Jordani de Buissei de c. li. 7 lx. s. 7 vi. d. de 1 anno. In thro xxij li. 7 x s." (that is, the rent for 1 year was £103 0*s.* 6*d.*, and he paid into the treasury £22 10*s.*); "et in restauratione ej'd. t're p c. & qat xx & iiij bobz de iij s. & xxi affr de iij s. Et p lxx vacc. de ij s. 7 p M. & DC. ovibz de iiij d. Et p lx scrofis & vj verr. de viij d.—lxvi li. & xij s. & iiij d. Et deb. xiij li. & xviij s. & ij d." I translate part of the above: "And in restauration of the said lands 184 oxen at 3*s.*; 21 yoke oxen at 3*s.*; 70 cows at 2*s.*; 1600 sheep at 4*d.*; 60 sows and 6 boars at 8*d.*—total £66 12*s.* 4*d.*; and so Postel still owes £13 18*s.* 2*d.*" (but such accounts usually come out wrong).

This Barony of Wark and Carram was held by the tenure of 2 knights' fees, and Jordan had paid that scutage until 8 Henry II. (that is, for payments made between 19 December 1160 and 18 December 1161), after which date he died in the year 1162.

While I am on this subject I may just as well prove it up to the hilt. In the Pipe Roll, 11 Henry II. (1164-5), under Tickhill Ric'. de Builli deb. relev. "su. vj. mil." Richard was the eldest surviving son of Jordan. The rate payable for relief on succeeding to estates had in earlier times varied at the will of the chief lords, but Henry II. had fixed it at £5 per knight's fee, and so we find Richard paying £30, thus: 1165, £5 0*s.* 4*d.*, and owes £24 19*s.* 8*d.*; 1166, £7 10*s.*, and owes £17 10*s.*; 1167, £3 6*s.* 8*d.*, and owes £14 3*s.* 4*d.*; 1168, in two payments, £6 13*s.* 4*d.*, and owes £7 10*s.*; and in 1169 he pays £7 10*s.* Et quiet' est. Total, £30 0*s.* 4*d.* On p. 155 we found that Jordan, and Roger III. his brother, when they entered on the joint tenure, paid on $5\frac{1}{3}$ of a fee. Here the same are computed as 6 knights' fees; I cannot account for these discrepancies.

But I must tell a little more of Jordan's career. In the Blythe chartulary

(Harl. MS. 3759, on pencil folio 101B), we have this very interesting and touching record: "Notum sit omnibus Xti fidelibus tamfuturis quam presentibus quod Jordan̄ de Bulleis consulentibus filiis suis et amicis, dedit Scte Marie de Blida quando monacum induit, terram Levini de Dumo solidam et quietam ab omni consuetudine liberimam. Posta vero Ricardus filius ejus major, veniens ad prædictam ecclesiam, die depositionis patris sui coram multis astantibus, hanc donationem super altare posuit et sigilli sui impressione roborando confirmavit sub. Testibus," etc., which means that when Jordanus took on himself the order of a monk at Blythe (monacum induit) he gave to them this land as an entrance fee in 1158 (and this is the date given in the list of their possessions, Dugd. Monasticon, 1655, vol. i, fo. 730, l. 32a), but being a verbal gift only with delivery of seisin, his elder son, on the day of his father's burial at Blythe, having first fortified it by his seal in the presence of witnesses, laid this recording formal charter on the altar while many were standing around, in the year 1162. Therefore he had lived a monk at Blythe for 4 years. I can only prove this one surviving son, Richard, but here we find Jordanus had consulted with his "sons" and friends. Several names occur in contemporary records which might be sons, but without absolute evidence to me in this exactest history they must be "vox et prœterea nihil," which I may here translate "nothing but names."

Some of those very few of our very ancientest families, whose pedigrees extend to these early times, claim to descend from daughters of Jordanus, but I have no evidences to prove or to disprove. Levinus de Dumo is mentioned elsewhere; his holding was land worth a shilling rent, and the charter should have read "solidam terræ quietam ab omni," etc. It is plain that in the transcript into the Chartulary (Harl. MS. 3759) the scribe has mis-read "t^{o}" for "et."

The monks were always fortifying their possessions by confirmations and repeated charters, and by referring to Dugd. Monast, ed. 1655, vol. i., p. 554, l. 18b, we find the confirmation given to Blythe by Idonea de Veteri Ponte, daughter of John de Bullei, when she was a widow and in liberâ potestate, dated 1232, and strengthened by her seal, solely to rectify this charter, which was somewhat carelessly drawn in 1158. "The gift and charity which my Ancestors gave them, videlicet, terram Lyevini de Dumo cum pertinenciis sicut se proportant in longitudine et latitudine." Warranty, etc. That was 74 years after the original transaction.

I cannot find the maiden name of the wife of Jordanus.

BAZELY FAMILY.

Mrs. Bazely would be glad to receive information as to where the Bazely family (formerly spelt Baseleye) hailed from, previous to their migration to Dover about 1589, on which date their name thus spelt is to be found in the church registers of that town. Their pedigree is recorded at the Heralds' College from that year onwards.

Mrs. Bazely is also anxious to discover the link connecting the Lincolnshire Boothbys, i.e. De Bothebys, De Bobis, mentioned by Bishop Saunderson in his manuscript, date 1632, of Boothby Pagnell, and those Boothbys settled at Marchington, co. Stafford, from whom the present Baronet is descended. Vide Cal. of Patent Rolls 1 Henry IV., part v., in which a Thomas Boothby appears as King's Receiver, of Tutbury Castle.

For Pedigrees see Burke's "Landed Gentry."

There are three difficulties to the above pedigree :—

1. Lewes Widdrington is entered in the Visitation of Northumberland and that of London as legitimate; in his father's will he is called "my base son Lewis."

2. The Rev. Ralph Widdrington, in his will 1688, mentions "to revert to the heirs of Ralph Widdrington of Chestham Grange, son of Sir Thomas Widdrington, his brother;" yet Sir Thomas ignored him in 1663, when he settled his estate in trust for Mary and Ursula his daughters, with remainder to Sir Henry Widdrington, his brother. The "Dictionary of National Biography" states Sir Thomas had an only son, who died before his father. Was this Ralph yet another "base son"?

3. The Rev. Ralph Widdrington mentions in his will nephew Henry Widdrington and Henry, junior, of Hertford, niece Margaret Widdrington of Hertford. In 1669 Henry Widdrington of Hertford had an estate at Datchworth worth £10 per annum ("H. C. R.," ii., p. 4). Salmon ("History of Herts," p. 43) specifies an inscription in All Saints' Church, Hertford: "Hic jacent Eleonora et Eliz. filiæ Henrici Widdrington, Arm. Prima ob. Aug. 26th, Altera Sept 9th, 1685." I have not been able to trace to which of the Rev. Ralph Widdrington's brothers Henry Widdrington was son. He is not mentioned in the wills of Thomas or Henry. He may have been son of Nicholas or Rowland, the draper of London.

GENEALOGICAL DIGEST OF OLD CASES.

COURT OF WARDS.

De Term Pasch. Ann. 2 and 3 Phil. and Mary.

Sir John Sha.

Edmond, mort sans issue male.	Thomas.
Alice Polye.	Thomas, within age.

The King, Lord of land held in knight's service. Thomas Sha, the father, being tenant in tail male of it, remainder to the heirs of the body of Sir John Sha, then dead (whose right heir was Alyce), remainder in fee simple to the right heirs of Sir John, who was the said Alyce. The said Thomas, the father, anno 27 Hen. VIII., after the death of the said Sir John Sha and Edmond Sha, covenanted to suffer a recovery to the use of one L., the wife of the said Edmond, for her life, and after her decease to the use of Thomas Sha, the father, and the heirs male of his body, remainder to the use of the heirs of the body of Sir John Sha, then dead, remainder to the right heirs of Sir John. The recovery was suffered accordingly.

Thomas, the father, died during the life of the said L., his said son Thomas within age. Then the King granted the Lordship to the Lord Riche in fee. L. dies.

The question is if Lord Riche shall have the wardship of the body of the heir and of the land.

PETITION OF RIGHT. De Term Hill. Ann. 3 and 4 Phil. and Mary.

Sir John Basset, Knight.

Arthur Basset, within age.

Manors, lands, and tenements, sometime the lands of the said Sir John, situate in the Counties of Devon, Somerset, Gloucester, and Wiltshire, in respect of which divers recoveries were suffered, in 16 Hen. VII., to the use of Sir Giles Dawbeney, Knight, Lord Dawbeney, and the heirs male of his body, remainder to the use of the said Sir John Basset and his heirs for ever. Indentures declaring the said uses were made 20 Hen. VII., whereby Lord Dawbeney, in default of heirs male of his body, had power to entail by his last Will, or other writing made in his lifetime, the said lands to any such two of his next of blood, one after the other, as he should appoint, with, in default of issue of their bodies, remainder to the said Sir John Basset in fee. Lord Dawbeney had issue Henry, late Earl of Bridgewater, who "discontinued" the said lands by fine with proclamation ann. 1 Ed. VI. to the late Duke of Somerset, then Protector, whereby he was seised of an estate in fee. And by virtue of the Statute ann. 32 Hen. VIII., the Duke was seised of a special estate tail with divers remainders over (with a saving of the titles of all strangers, etc.), of which estate he died seised, after whose death the Act of his attainder, ann. 5 Ed. VI., deprived him of such estate as was conveyed to him in fee simple, which estate in fee simple was by the Act forfeited and given to the King. But by the same Act all the lands of the Duke were given to the King in fee, with the saving of all titles of strangers, for the Statute 5 Ed. VI. repealed the first Act.

Sir Giles Dawbeney died without heir male.

Sir John Basset the grandfather, and John Basset the father, both died in the lifetime of Henry, Earl of Bridgewater.

A Memoriall

of the Worshipfull Master Robert Wadson,† late Citizen & Merchant Taylor of London.

Epitaphium | So fraile and brittle is the life of man | That who lives longest liveth but a span; | In youth and age all dye God hath so doom'd, | That Earth returnes to Earth to be intombed. | Wadson, who of that substance was composed | Lies in his mother's Center here enclos'd, | A sheet doth hide his face, but not his fame, | The Grave containes his corps not his good name; | For his good name outlives (O blessed man) | When others good names dye before they can. | The sixt of January (that fatall day) | Sixteene hundred twenty foure he did pay | The debt of Nature which all men doe know, | He was no sooner borne but he did owe. | If Vertues could have staied the hand of Death, | Then Wadson still had drawne his vitall breath. | His soule above, his worths doe here remaine, | Till Christ shall come to raise him up againe: | Thus he enjoyes Heav'ns immortality | And here on Earth, Earth's happy memory | Post varios vitæ casus dabit urna quietem.

THE FAMILY OF COPE.

In "Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Third Series, Vol. IV., pp. 208—223, are given interesting pedigrees of this family. On p. 213 appears the marriage of Sir Anthony Cope, born 1549, and who died 1617. It is here recorded that his second wife was "Anne, da. of Sir W. Paston, born 1548; married 1602; remarried Sir G. Chaworth and Sir Nicholas Lestrange; died 1637. 2nd wife."

May I be permitted to rectify some slight discrepancy in the above?

Sir Anthony Cope was Anne Paston's third husband. She first married Sir George Chaworth, as George Chaworth, Armiger, in Paston Church, Norfolk, 15 July 1572. She then married Sir Nicholas L'Estrange, who died 22 December 1592, as his second wife, and as his relict married Sir Anthony Cope as his second wife.

Having been engaged for some four or five years in the compilation of an exhaustive genealogical account of the family of Paston of Paston, Oxnead, Appleton, Blofield, Barningham, and other manors in Norfolk, Huntingfield Hall in Suffolk, and Horton Court and Manor in Gloucestershire, I am indebted to Mrs. Cope for the additional data relating to Anne Paston. I refer to the dates of her birth, marriage with Sir Anthony Cope, and her death.

I may add that the Arms of Paston of Norfolk are: Argent, six fleurs-de-lis in pile, three, two, and one, Azure, a chief indented or.

Reviews.

Wills, Registers, and Monumental Inscriptions of the Parish of Barwick in Elmet, co. York. Edited by George Denison Lumb, F.S.A. Privately printed at Leeds. 1908.

This portly volume of 452 pp. is issued at the expense of the Editor, who has made the work as generally useful as possible by adding extracts from Wills proved in the Courts of the Archbishop of York from 1404 to 1750, also in giving transcripts of the Registers at York from 1600 of Baptisms, Marriages, and Deaths up to 1811, besides enumerating the Monumental Inscriptions in the Church; the whole concluding with an ample Index of Places and Surnames. The whole is well printed on a stout laid paper, shewing its rough edges, and is edited with great care, and the Editor deserves the hearty thanks of all interested in genealogy, by thus saving valuable memoranda from the chance of fire or destruction by time. We only regret the work was not bound in cloth instead of merely in a paper cover, for it deserves a stronger casing as a book for general reference.

The Journal of the Ex Libris Society. Vol. XVIII., Parts 8—10, August, September, and October 1908. London: A. and C. Black, Soho Square.

The August and September Parts have as page-plates the Arms of Dr. Stubbs, the Lord Bishop of Truro, and the bookplate of Lady Edith Neeld, nicely engraved, and the design of a Napoleonic character, with the initials "E. N." in the centre; besides two plates giving five bookplates delicately drawn and designed by Mr. W. P. Barrett for ladies, three of which give views of castles and mansions, one has a sea view with a floral margin, and one gives the interior of a sitting room, etc. There are also eight Bohemian bookplates, some of which dating from the fifteenth and sixteenth century, and exhibited by J. Zivny. The bookplates for identification are from numbers 631—637, and Mr. Johnston from Lyon Court has a fresh plate drawn for Mr. Richard Ashmole Cooper.

The October Part has for a frontispiece the arms of Sir David Lionel G. S. Salomons, Bart., beautifully designed and drawn by Mr. W. P. Barrett. There are also the arms shewn of Eton College, founded in 1440, and lately added to by King Edward VII.; Harrow School, founded in 1571; and Charterhouse School, founded in the reign of James I. The bookplate of Rugby School is also shewn, as well as that of Cheltenham College, on a separate plate; each School has also a short account given of it, which must enhance our interest, and adds materially to the attraction of the Part. Besides the above plates are four others for identification, numbered up to 641; there are three more Bohemian bookplates given, as well as one of Mr. William Edward Armytage Axon, an influential journalist of Manchester, who was Deputy Chief Librarian of the Manchester Free Libraries, and author of several works on Lancashire, etc. The Editor is indeed to be congratulated on the good variety of each Part.

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record. Vol. XXXIX., Nos. 4 for October 1908. New York : 226 West 58th Street.

THE portrait of Grover Cleveland forms the frontispiece for this Part, and there is an excellent account of him by Mr. Lyman Abbott. This is followed by a long list of the Loyalists of the War, and then the Records of the United Brethren Congregation, Staten Island, New York. The lineage of several families follows, the Hoppe-Hoppen-Hopper family, the Knickerbocker family, and the Skillmans of America and their kin. A List of Lords of Manors of New York follows, seventeen in all, of which an account of each is given, and with Book Notices and Title and Index of Names in Vol. xxxix the Part finishes. For biography it is triumphant.

Fenland Notes and Queries. Vol. VII., Part 79 for October 1908. Edited by Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. Peterborough : George C. Caster, Market Place.

THIS Part has a diagram shewing remains of the old subterranean forests, but offers no suggestion as to when they were submerged; the writer can only adopt the theory of volcanic action, afterwards by subsidence, to account for the low level of the Fens. There is a paper on An Old Account Book of 1796 to 1802, which is interesting, as it shews what expense a man was put to in providing for the cavalry billeted upon him in 1797, and other expenses. "The Sacrilegious Gamester" is an amusing episode occurring in Holland and neighbourhood, greatly to the disgust of neighbours, in the middle of the last century. "Leverington Parish Accounts" of 1515 are voluminous, but is attributed to the payment to a professional man to draw them up, at the cost of 6d. a year! "Church Inscriptions in the Hundred of Elloe" are given, also one to the Harriss Family of Kirton, all of which are interesting, the dates being from 1706. There is a short account of the Horners' Company, shewing that it sprang from a branch of industry of horn-making, each person wearing some ornament of horn upon his head, which was discontinued in 1768, but the fair was not abolished till 1872. The Part is very interesting, and varied in contents.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. Vol. XVI., No. 2, for October 1908. Published by the Virginia Historical Society, Richmond, U.S.A.

THIS October Part begins with a long account of "The Randolph Manuscript," giving letters from the various Governors of Virginia and the King in 1627; and it is followed by an account of the Council Journals of 1743—1760, the Records for the time being destroyed, but fortunately their loss can be repaired from the English Public Record Office. The orders to the Governors were very stringent, £20 being given for a deserter from H.M.S. "Arundel." Grants of land were also very liberally given. "Pension Declarations" and "Army Records" follow, giving orders for the main army under Washington, 1778-1779. "Virginia Gleanings in England" and "Notes and Queries" conclude a very interesting Part, finishing with a General Index.

THE HISTORY AND DESCRIPTION OF

Santry and Cloghran Parishes, co. Dublin.

BY THE LATE REV. BENJAMIN W. ADAMS, D.D.,

Rector of Santry, Ireland.

London: MITCHELL HUGHES and CLARKE, 140 Wardour Street, W.

Grant of Arms to Sir Benjamin Oliver, Knight.

The original grant of arms is in the possession of Richard Oliver Heslop, M.A., F.S.A., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. It was sent to him many years ago, but he cannot recollect by whom. Lent by him to Vere L. Oliver, Esq., who kindly contributes it for reproduction in its original colours.—EDITOR.

By a Chancery Suit of 1646 (Dyet v. Oliver, D. 5, No. 34) it appears that in 1640 Benjamin Oliver of Exeter, fuller, purchased £20 worth of wool, for his natural brother Richard Oliver, then of Totnes, feltmaker.

He was later a Royalist, and compounded for his estate in 1652. He was Bailiff in 1661 and 1667, Receiver 1667, and Sheriff 1668. In 1671 he was serving the office of Mayor, and was knighted on July 23 by Charles II. on His Majesty's passage from Plymouth to London. He died 2 November 1672 in the 71st year of his age, and a handsome marble monument adorned with his single coat of arms was erected to his memory in St. John's Church, Fore Street. His town house was in that street, and is I believe still standing, but his country house at Exwick no longer exists.

His portrait by William Gandy hangs in the Guildhall, being three-quarter length life-size, oil on canvas, seated figure habited in the fur-edged mayoralty robes, with broad linen bands below the chin. The face, turned to the right, is surmounted by dark hair or wig, with a very slight dark moustache and shaved chin. The left hand holds a pair of gloves, whilst the right rests on the arm of the chair. In the background a partly withdrawn curtain shews a landscape, apparently a distant view of Exeter. ["Report of Devon Association," vol. xv., p. 126.]

By his will dated 14 April 1672, and proved 27 November 1672, in the Principal Registry of the Bishop of Exeter, he bequeathed £200 to the Mayor, etc., for poor schollars in the Hospital, £10 a year to his brother Rich[d] Oliver (evidently the aforesaid one of Totnes in 1640), and after giving legacies to grandchildren and others, devised all his lands in Exeter, Broad Clist, and Clist Honiton to his only child Benjamin. Inventory £2454. Seal of arms as in the Grant.

His first wife Jane had predeceased him 7 July 1670, aged 66, after a married life of 44 years.

Benjamin Oliver, the only son and heir, married first Mary dau. of George Yong of Forton, gent., and died 2 January 1671, aged 35. By this match there was an only surviving son Joseph Oliver of Exwick House, who married in 1689 Margaret Mercer, but left no male issue. Benjamin Oliver married 2ndly in 1673-4 Elizabeth, dau. of Henry Worth, gent., of Washfield, by Dorothy, dau. of John Bampfylde of Poltimore, by whom he had two sons: 1, Benjamin, of Exeter College, Oxford, and of the Middle Temple in 1692, and of Brampford Speke in 1708, and 2, Francis, who left an only son of the same name, likewise a grandson and heir, Francis, born 1707, at whose death the family became apparently extinct in the male line. Benjamin Oliver's will was dated 26 November 1704, and proved 24 August 1705 in the Archdeaconry Court at Exeter. Seal of arms: . . . . within a bordure engrailed a fleur-de-lis, but in an Indenture in my possession, made 16 December 4 Anne, the seal used has the arms as in the Grant.

Descent in the Male Line of the Family of Grazebrook from 1065, with Proofs for each Generation.*

[B. Gen. 4.] Richard de Busli, his eldest surviving son, mentioned above as placing on the altar the charter to record his father's gift, was born in or about the year 1116. He married, in or about 1141, Emma . . . ., a lady, who brought into the family considerable estates in Berks and Oxfordshire, but whose maiden name I cannot give. She was dead in or before 1200, because their son John de Builli (Rot. Pip. 1201-2), owed 20 m̃ for having his mother's lands. This comes under Warengford, Berks, and to be accounted for in Yorkshire, but elsewhere Warengford is stated to be in Bucks and Beds. This clue should supply us with her name and family, but so far I have not been able to trace it out. (Can this be a form of spelling Wallingford in Berkshire? but I have no information as to landowners there.)

In 1147 (Dugd. Monast., 1655, vol. i., p. 835, l. 44[b]) Richard de Builli, with the consent of his wife and heirs, founded the Abbey of Roche, on a spot about three miles south-west of Tickhill, where the estates of de Busli and Fitz Turgis adjoined, and Richard Fitz Turgis and he combined in the foundation. De Builli gave to the monks the wood of Eilrichthorpe from Louvetueit to the water which divides between Maltebi and Hotun. and other benefactions, and among a long list of witnesses occur Hugone de Lungetveit, Roberto, de Scalzebi (he was son of Roger de Busli C), and others. In the charter of Fitz Turgis he gives his whole lands of Eirichetorp, naming the bounds, "the way as far as Wlvepit," the wood of Wicherslei, and other particulars. "Richardo filio Turgis et Richardo de Bulli inter se concordantibus et concedentibus ut ambo fundatores abbatiœ sint." Inasmuch as Richard de Builli's offspring could then be only 5 years old, the heirs who consented must be looked for elsewhere.

In a later charter, which must have been about 1163, because his father being dead and he in possession, he could not have earlier confirmed a gift made by his father, who died during the year 1162. Richard had paid his relevium as detailed on page 156 in the Pipe Rolls for 1164-5, etc.

We find (Dugd. Monast., vol. i, p. 836, l. 37[a]), Richard de Bulli gives and confirms "consilio et consensu uxoris meœ et heredum meorum" to God and St. Mary and the monks of Roche, Eilrichtorp and its purtenances; also he confirms and concedes to them the lands of William de Alz which my father gave to them; also the land which they have of the gift of Robert my knight of Scalzbi; and as witnesses appear William my son and heir, and R[ichard] my son, then 2 priests, and then Robertus de Bulli (he was the son of Roger III. and was, as described in the body of the deed, "my Knight of Scalzbi," and then resident in that vill. See Family C. Gen. 4.).

I would here point out that this was the fifth abbey which had been founded and endowed by the Blood before the year 1150, viz., Blythe 1088, Kirkham 1121, Rievaulx 1131, Wardon 1135, and Roche 1147, thus supplying me with the great quantity of charters which has made it so easy to prove these generations. The ordinary official records, so far as they are still preserved, may be said to begin 1131, after which there is a gap till 1155, when the invaluable Pipe Rolls became continuous, and with other gradually accumulating records ought to prove everything that happened to everyone that ever existed above a certain rank.

* Communicated by GEO. GRAZEBROOK, Esq., F.S.A.—continued from p. 157.

It strikes me as rather unusual that Richard and his wife should found Roche Abbey in 1147, when he was 31, and his father and uncle both alive and in joint possession of the family estates, which they held for 10 years afterwards. Perhaps if I knew who the lady was and that estates of good extent were held "jure uxoris" it would explain all. The wording of the charter in 1147 is "with the consent of my wife." In the charter of 1162 it is "with the counsel and consent of my wife." But the lands given in endowment were ancestral ones and then in the joint possession of Jordan and Roger III.

We now come to the lease and agreement given to the monks of Kirkstead in 1162 (Dugd. Monst., 1655, p. 811, l. 25[a]). Know ye that I, Richard de Builli, with the approval and counsel of Emma my wife, and my heirs, have demised to the monks of Kirkested "unum managium in territorio de Kymberworth" for their house and garden, and for the making of four forges, two that is to say "ad quoquendum ferrum" for the smelting of iron, and two "ad fabricandam" for its manufacture, wheresoever they will, and for digging mineral throughout the whole territory of the same vill, sufficient for two furnaces, and the dead wood in the forest of Kymberworth sufficient for their four furnaces, and pasture for ten animals and four horses, in common pasture of their fields. To hold of me and my heirs free of all services and customs except what they give every year to me or my heirs, namely, 5 shillings at Pentecost. And know ye that the monks remain quietly in possession of their territory for the whole firm of 5 years which began in anno domini 1161, on the day of the Apostles Philip and James (1 May 1161, which comes within the regnal year 8 Henry II). But after the end of these 5 years if the aforesaid monks should wish to remain they may hold all that in perpetuity of me and my heirs by the same agreement, namely, by paying yearly 5 shillings for all services. Now this convention, holding, and warranty for me and my heirs I have confirmed by charter and the undernoted witnesses and the confirmation of my seal. Witnesses named (the last of whom is Thomas filius Jocelini Ebor, and he was the great Jew money-lender of York).

This confirmed the previous agreement, and recorded it by a formal charter immediately after his father's death. (Hunter's "South Yorkshire," ii., p. 26, describes the indications still existing of these Ironworks started 750 years before.)

In the Surtees Society, vol. 42, "Memorials of Fountains Abbey," p. 67 note, confirmation by Robert fil. Hugonis fil. Eudonis de Tatshall, about 1167, gave licence to the Monks of Kirkstead to move their Abbey, and gave them common of pasture in Tatshall, Thorpe, and Kirby, and therein refers to these ironworks at Thundercliffe, which had been given them by Richard de Builli in 1161; and, I suppose, this circumstantial statement is from the Chartulary of Fountains.

We now come to a curious and very interesting stage. We have seen that Jordanus and his younger brother Roger III. were left in joint occupation of the original 7½ knights' fees, or whatever remained of them. Roger had died during the year between December 1155 and December 1156, when the question of division among the heirs might have arisen, but joint occupation under some family arrangement continued, and when Jordan died in 1162, we have seen (p. 156) Richard, eldest son of Jordan, paying the relevium on the whole 6 knights' fees, over which he, as premier heir, was and would continue to be chief lord. So that does not help us! We often come to joint occupations, especially in the case of coheiresses, and usually they went on until the coheiresses or some of them died, and so the final heirs were more plainly seen; also, whether it would be necessary to break up a great estate? And very often this was avoided by the extinction of those, or the heirs of those, who would probably have been claimants. We know by after events that Richard remained as chief lord and responsible to the King for the whole taxation of these six feoda, and that he and his descendants held in demesne only their very desirable manor of Maltby, which it was arranged should pay the quota as for 1½ (or 2?) knights' fees only, and that the other manors, as divided out, had allotted to them such taxations as would make up the remaining 4½ knights' fees.

Having said so much here, it is better to leave this subdivision till we come to Roger III. (Family C, gen. 3), when we can clearly see how some few, at any rate, of these various estates were divided up. Some sort of provisional arrangement must have been carried out after the deaths of Roger III. (C) 1155-6 and Jordanus (B) in 1162. We often meet with such apportionings in later times, but the Records do not begin until about a hundred years later than our present date, and are usually in settlement of dower. Subject to these, and after the reign of Henry I., when the laws were altered, entailed estate went wholly and without encumbrance to the eldest son, but he had to make a proportional recompence to the others. If there were only daughters they succeeded jointly and equally, but the eldest had the capital messuage (Reeve's "Hist. of Law," i., p. 30). Our case, however, is exceptional; the $7\frac{1}{2}$ knights' fees were at the first left jointly to Jordan and Roger III.!

As, perhaps, the general reader may cavil at such portioning out of knights' fees in this arbitrary way, which was not unusual when subdividing estates in early times, I give an Inquisition on these very estates, which will shew that my statement is exact (Add. MS. Brit. Mus. 24,467, folio 752). In Rotuli Feodorum Honoris de Tykehull "Johes Pilkington, miles, nuper tenuit in Maltby cum membris 6 feoda; pro servicio 1 feodum Inquiratur quo modo? Richard, Duke of Gloucester (after 1461), de jure uxoris holds in Kymberworth 1 feod. de dictis sex; tenentes under Marmaduci Darrell in Brodsworth 1 feod. de dictis sex; tenentes terræ Ric'i Scawsby, ten. in Scawsby 1 feod. de dictis sex; Et cetera feoda que sunt in com. Notts."

Again, Inquis. ad quod dampnum, 33 Edward I., No. 170 (1304), "William de Hamilton, clicus, seeks to give to the church of St. Peter of York 1 bov. t're with the Church and the Manor of Brodsworth, which he holds of William Darel, who holds of Robert de Clifford as of the Manor of Malteby as 1 knts. fee. The Jury say Robert holds the Manor of Malteby cum suis membris of the King as of the honor of Tickhill." I think perhaps I had better nail this down here by quoting what Selden says ("Titles of Honor," ed. 1672, p. 572), being chap. v., sec. 17: King John (1199) granted to Walter Scroop Insulas de Asmundeshey et de Clere "pro quinque militum per servicium unius militis et medietatis unius militis pro omni servicio" (Cart. 1 Jo. R., part 1, m. 1). Again, "If the King gave xx knights' fees to be held in chief, or lands to be held by the service of xx knights, if the patentee infeoffed others of part to be held under him (for example) by the service of xv knts., then the K. was served at the charge of his Baron the patentee with v knts., and the other xv were supplied by those that held the rest; yet so, that if they failed in their service, the Baron was to pay escuage (according to their number) to the King, and have his like remedy against them." We shall have several instances as we go on, so I think it well to set this out distinctly here.

Richard de Busli I. died about 1179-80, and would thus be about 64 years of age. We have seen at p. 198 that about 1162, in confirming lands to Roche, the witnesses are William (III.) my son and heir, Richard (II.) my son, and that John, who was then only 19 years of age, is of course not mentioned; but the elder brothers William and Richard both died s.p., and so John succeeded and is recorded in possession of the estates in and about 1180.

[B. Gen. 5.] John de Busli, the only surviving son of Richard I., was born about 1145-6, and was therefore about 18 or 19 years of age at the date of his father's Confirmation Charter above to the monks of Roche in 1163, and so his name could not appear as a witness, although his two brothers are there. Before 1164-5, when he would be scarcely 21 years of age, he married Cecilia, elder daughter to William de Busli II. (Family A, p. 111) and coheiress of that branch.

Nicolson and Burn ("Hist. of Cumberland and Westmoreland," i., p. 456) say, about 1½ miles west from Appleby, on the side of the River Eden, stands Buley Castle, built by or belonging to John Builli, whose daughter and heiress married Robert de Veteri Ponte, as a protection to his estates in these parts. I have only a photograph; in its present state it looks a powerful Peele. Irregular mounds and the starting of side-walls imply outbuildings. The one window, shewn high up, must be of date 1200 or a few years earlier. This must have been for protection from Scottish invasions.

In 1180-81 Pipe Roll, 27 Henry II., Linc., "John de Builli Red. Compot. de xx m̃ pro disseis injusta. In thro. xlv s. et debet iiij ti. viij s. & iiij d." This is repeated 1181-2, 28 Henry II., "John de Bulli R. comp. de iiij ti. viij s. & iiij d. et deb. l s. & iiij d. requirendi in Yorkshire; also 29 Henry II. (1182-3) "R. Comp. de l s. & iiij d. In thro. liberavit E.Q.E."

In 1181-2, as already given (p. 113), Pipe Roll, 28 Henry II., "Hugh Wak and Joñs de Builli Red. Comp. of C ti." for Walter de Buissei's fine for entering upon his lands (under Bucks and Beds). Therefore both Walter and Bartholomew were dead before 1180-81, and their two brothers-in-law, John de Builli and Hugh Wach entered upon the estates of Family A and cleared off the debt for their relevium.

1191-2 we find in the Pipe Roll, 3 Ric. I. (Surtees Society, vol. 67, p. 19 note), among lists of the creditors of Aaron the Jew, Hugh and John de Builli; and again, in "Rot. Cancellarii," 3 John (1201-2), at p. 285, we have this curious entry: "De debitis Aaron, Joñes de Builli redd̃ comp̃ de q^{a}ter xx & ix ti. & xii s. & viii d̃ de eod̃ fine. In the s̃. iiij ti. & x s̃ Et deb̃ q^{a}ter xx ti. & C & ij s̃ & viij d̃." Therefore he had been for at least ten years under a heavy obligation to this Jew, now transferred to the King, and still owed £85 2*s.* 8*d.*

I put these two together here because they may throw some light on other records to be adduced, but I have such a great quantity of recorded facts concerning this John that I must select a few only, and try to condense them into a short account of his life and doings. In the Red Book of the Exchequer are many memoranda from the Pipe Rolls, 1194 to 1201-2, but exact dates are not usually attached in that Record, and I have not myself read through the originals after 30 Henry II. Future readers can fill up this blank from the reconstituted Pipe Roll Society, whose programme it is to print down to 1202-3. The entries quoted in the Red Book are 1194-5, 1196-7. In 1201-2 his holding in Bucks and Beds Returns 1½ knights' fees, etc. (scutage, etc.), Ebor and Notts vj knights fees de Honore de Tickhill; also in "Rotuli Oblatis et Finibus," at p. 155, under knights holding under the Bishop of Lincoln in 1201, Joh's de Builli gave ix m̃ pro eodem, holding iij knights' fees, and the next entry, Matild' Wak gave ix m̃ pro eodem, holding iij knights' fees.

On 25 February 1201 King John commits to John de Bulli the custody of the Castellum of Scarborough cum Castellaria (Rot. Cartarum in turri Lond. asservati, p. 101^{b}), and on 9 April following sends his commands, etc., to the burgesses to obey, etc. (idem, p. 103^{b}). During his tenure considerable works were done at the castle, and noted in the Liberate Roll, 3 John (1201-2), m. 1; and in 1208 he was superseded as Castellan by Robert de Vaux ("Yorksh. Archæol. Journal," vol. viii., p. 181).

In Rot. Cancell, 3 John (1201-2), John de Bulli Redd. Comp. de £46 10*s.* numero, de diõ anno (half a year) de firma de Scardeburg, also x ti. bl̃ (blanche) de firma de Walesgrave de anno integro. A statement of his expenses at Scardeburg Castle is given in "Rot. Litt. Clausarum," vol. i., 59^{b}, and tested by Robert de Veteri Ponte 16 December 1205.

In the Pipe Roll, 3 John (1201-2), p. 290, Ebor de oblatis John de Builli deb̃ xx m̃ ne transfretet (because he did not go to service across sea) et xx m̃ pro habenda t'ra matris suæ. This last clause as to his mother's land is also noted at p. 261, headed Berks and "Warengford de placita foreste," and to be paid in Yorkshire; also, at p. 320, in same year he pays for Scutage de Tikehull Notts and Derby xii m̃ de feod̃ vj milit̃, "sic Vic̃ dicit" (so the sheriff declares). "What has become of the 7½ ?" Also, at p. 350, Bucks and Beds for the same year, De primo Scuī Regis Joñis xviij s & viij d.

Under date 16 March 1205 ("Rot. Litt. Clausarum," p. 23) the King advises his Bailiff of Pikering that he has conceeded to Cecilia the wife of Joñis de Buylli custody of the lands of Wido de Aselakesby, which custody is in our hands. Witness, Rob. de Veteri Ponte apud Meleburñ above date. I note these because Robert de Veteri Ponte was destined to marry the sole heiress of John, and I am not quite sure that he was not already his son-in-law! But this will be examined presently, when exact dates can be worked out. At this time de Vipont was in high favour with the King.

In 1200-1 (2 John, Abbreviatio placitorum, rot. 12) we have this entry: "The Dean of Lincoln recovered from Matilda Wach and Joñem de Bulli and Cecilia his wife the advowson of the church of Bocland in Bucks, by default." I conclude they had neglected to appoint within the limited time, but it shews that they owned this living.

In "Rotuli Oblat et Fin.," at p. 155, under date 1201, "Knights holding of the Bishopric of Lincoln—Linc. (called Oxon), Joñis de Builli dat. ix m̃ pro eod, tenz iij feoda milit.;" and the next entry, "Matilda Wake dat. ix m̃ pro eod, tenz iij feoda mit." In the Red Book of the Exchequer (p. 515) we have "apud Thame Johannes de Builli iij feod. mit," explaining the correction in "Rot. Oblat et Fin." Thame is in Oxfordshire, on the borders of Bucks. This was within the Bishoprick of Lincoln, which at that date extended from the Thames to the Humber.

A great deal more might be added to these Records, but I will now tie John de Builli and Richard his father together by giving a few of the Charters.

In Dugdale's "Monasticon" (1655, vol. i., p. 836, l. 59[a]) John de Builli confirms to the monks at Roche all that his father Ricardus de Builli had given them; also he allows them to make a ditch around their fields between the wood of Malteby and the fields of Sandbec, excepting an eyry of Hawks which the monks conceded to him, also excepting two ways scilicet Bolgate and the road to Blythe. Testes, three priests, Roberto fit Pagani, Radulpho filio ejus, Hugone Scancebi, and others. In curia de Tikeill. There is no mention of his wife's consent, neither is her name referred to in the two Blythe Charters which follow, but I do not think we can draw any inference from that.

Blythe Chartulary (Harl. MS. 3759, pencil folio 101). John de Bulli gives to the monks of Blythe the churches of Ostrefeld and Bautre. He also gives to them duodecim denarios of yearly rental, viz., 6*d.* at the feast of St. Martin and 6*d.* at Pentecost from land formerly of Robert Prat in the ville of Sandbeck; but in another Charter given in Harl. MS. 801, aa. 17 (which are Dodsworth's Notes from the original Charters out of the chest of Roche Abbey in St. Mary's Tower, York), the wording is: "Know ye that I, John, son of Richard de Buisley, by consent of my wife and of Idonea my daughter, have given to the monks of Roche the lands in Sandbec." Also (Bodleian, Yorkshire Deeds, No. 75), "I, Joñes de builli, give and confirm by this my present charter to God and Sc̃o Joñi de Pontefract dimid acra t're, cumtofte eid' t're pertinente, in Kimberurdia which Godwinus de hillum holds, ad luminare in Capella Sc̃i Victoris martyris, with the said Godwinus and all that belongs to him. Testibus hug' de Scaucebi: Rob fit Ric' de Crokestune, Alano Capello, Hug' de Mekesburc, hugone Capello de Roderham, Rad' de Aigrū, Ric pistore, Witto de Mekesburc, Joñe de Curci, Rado Coco et aliis." This is not in the 1655 Monasticon. In the 1817 edition an incorrect copy has been included (see Pontefract Chartulary, also Yorkshire Archæological Society, Record Series, vol. xxx., p. 528). My copy is from the original parchment, which has a very large seal, a cinquefoil with rays, and on the reverse the secretum, shewing a large dragon. A very perfect impression of this is attached to Add. MS. 20,583 in Brit. Mus. (see engraving in "Journal of Archæological Association" for 1886, p. 33). I may add that the contracted names which I read Mekesburc [that is Mexborough, five miles from Rotherham and within the Honor of Tickhill] is read by some "Monksburgh." There is no such name or place in Yorkshire, or, so far as I can see, in England!

John de Busli had died in or before 1213. In "Rot. Litt. Clausarum," vol. i., p. 136, we read "Rex. Henr de Braybroc, etc., Precipimus tibi quod sñ dilõe haƀe facias dilčo nřo Roƀto de Veťi Ponte plenař saisinā de totā ťrā q̄ fuit Joħis de Builly in Baħis tuis cū oñib3 cataħ q̄ Ydoneā uxorē suā filiā ipi9 Joħis ħeditarie contingit. Eodem modo scribit Constabuł Tikehuħ & Vič Eborač Dat eadē Eodē eciam modo scribitr Custodi t9re q̄ fuit Roberti de Turneham."

On the death of John de Busli the male line of Family B became extinct. He left one only daughter.

Tenisoniana.*

In my researches (so far unsuccessful) undertaken to establish the undoubted relationship of Thomas Tenison of Carrickfergus, 1642 and 1645, father of Bishop Richard Tenison (see "Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Vol. I., Fourth Series, p. 146, etc.), with Archbishop Tenison, I obtained many particulars from Wills, Parish Registers, etc., of persons of the name in the cradle of the family, Holderness. Though the name is almost extinct there now, there were several families of Tennisons, Tennysons, Tenisons (with other variations of the spelling) there from the fourteenth to the seventeenth century. It is impossible to disentangle these families, for in the same place at the same time were individuals of the same name. All the places named in the subjoined notes are in Holderness, in a small topographical compass, and the various families of Tennyson, etc., were doubtless all of kin, and probably descended from Tennysons who were living at Welwick, Burton Pidsea, and other adjacent places, in the middle of the fourteenth century. Any additions to these notes would be welcomed.

I. John Tenyson, of Ryhill, witness to will of Robert Stutt, 1505, was probably father of:

1. William Tenyson, ancestor of Archbishop Tenison (see "Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Vol. II., Third Series, p. 141, etc.).
2. John Tenyson, next.

John Tenyson, of Ryhill, had lands at Stokett Croft. Will dated 20 September, 1528; married Margaret (she living 1528, and probably also in 1546, and the Margaret named in will of John Tennyson, the younger, nephew of her husband). They had issue:

1. Thomas Tennyson, next.
2. Robert Tennyson, named in will of John Tennyson, the younger, 1546; in brother William's will, 1557; in will of John Tennyson of Kayingham, 1558.
3. John Tennyson, of Ryhill, probably the "Little John Tennyson" of Ryhill, godson of his uncle William, 1528. In will of John Tenyson, the younger, 1546; in brother William's will, 1557; died 1562, having married Agnes and had issue:
   a. John Tennyson. ? of Thorngumbald; will proved 1610.
   b. Thomas Tenyson. ? godson of uncle Richard.
   c. Christopher Tennyson.

Grant of Arms to Arthur Stone of the Inner Temple, 1729.

The original patent (which is now in the possession of William Stone, Esq., of Guildford, Surrey, fifth in descent from the grantee of the arms) is on vellum, the upper and side margins being illuminated with scrolls, conventional flowers, etc., in gold and colours. The Arms of Stone are upon a shield within an ornamental frame; below are two green palm-branches; there is an ornate esquire's helm with a mantlet Gules, doubled Argent. The Motto, upon a ribbon beneath, is VERITAS PETRA MEA.

The Arms of the King (Quarterly: 1st, England and Scotland per pale; 2nd, France; 3rd, Ireland; 4th, Hanover) are upon a mantle of estate in the upper margin; they are surrounded by the Garter, and ensigned with the Crown. The Motto, DIEU ET MON DROIT, is on a blue ribbon below.

In the margin to the left are the Arms of the Duke of Norfolk (Quarterly: 1st, Howard; 2nd, Brotherton; 3rd, Warren; 4th, Fitzalan), ensigned with a duke's coronet, and having the two bâtons of the Earl Marshal in saltire behind the shield.

In the margin to the right are the Arms of the Earl of Sussex* (Argent, three lions rampant and a chief Gules), within the ribbon of the Bath, and ensigned with an earl's coronet; behind is one Earl Marshal's bâton in bend dexter.

The tin boxes containing the seals of the Kings of Arms appear to have been originally silvered, and on each side are impressed with a rude representation of a rose. The silk ribbons to which the seals are attached are yellow and red, the livery colours of the Stone family.

GRANT OF ARMS TO MACKENZIE FRASER, ESQ.

["Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Fourth Series, Vol. II., p. 301.]

It is not often, I should think, that a grant of arms signed by three kings has been issued from the Heralds' College which bears an imperfect blazon, such as this one does. I naturally thought that a paragraph had been left out as printed, but Clarenceux and Rouge Dragon both confirm the accuracy of this print. It consists in the three antique crowns being left without their tincture "gules"; and surely in most other grants the helmet (in this case properly helmets), wreaths, and mantling are properly blazoned, whilst here they are conspicuous by their absence. The only redeeming point is that the achievement on the margin has been correctly painted; this lowers the dignity of the blazon still more.

Can any one say whether this is an early example of one helmet not bearing a crest doing duty for two crests skied in mid-air?

SHILLABER FAMILY.

Can any one furnish information concerning the early history of the Shillaber family in England? The tradition in the several branches of the family in America is to the effect that one John Shillaber came to this country from Devonshire, England, some time between 1680 and 1699. He settled in Salem, Massachusetts, but we have no mention of the name in the old town records until 1712. From that date on the genealogy of the family is clear.

In Hunter's "Familiæ Minorum Gentium," Vol. III., page 1138 (Harl. Soc.), mention is made of Elizabeth Shillaber, daughter of Walter and Elizabeth Shillaber, of Tavistock. These names, Walter and Elizabeth, are familiar ones in the early history of the family in this country. Possibly there may have been a connection between this Walter and our primal American ancestor John.

I have observed that several modifications of the name occur in England at the present time, particularly in Devonshire and Cornwall, as Shillibeer, Shillibeare, etc.; it seems more than likely that all of these names had a common origin. I have learned of but one family in England of the name of Shillaber, spelled as it is spelled here. This is a family living at present at Cornwall, though the grandfather is said to have come from Walkhampton, Devonshire.

Any information concerning the name, however spelled, will be very gladly received,

CHARLES PATTEN SHILLABER.

BUTLER OF ASTON-LE-WALLS.

["Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Fourth Series, Vol. III., p. 73.]

BIRCH OF GOSCOTT AND CULCHETH OF WAPPENBURY.

With reference to Mr. Everard Green's interesting pedigree of the family of the Rev. Alban Butler, I may note that in the (Harl. Soc.) Visitation of Oxfordshire, Ralph Butler, who heads the pedigree, is said to have been "of St. Alban's, Herts," thus accounting for the singularly persistent Christian name of "Alban."

I note that owing to an error, Ralph's son John appears in Mr. Green's pedigree as "Joan."

On p. 75 Simon Butler's second wife is stated to be Anne, daughter of Henry Birch, of Goscott. Henry would, I suppose, be identical with Henry Birch, son and heir of John Birch, of Goscott, deceased, who was admitted to his father's lands in the Manor of Walsall on 31 October, 1699.

I expect that Anne had a sister Isabel, who married . . . . Culcheth of Wappenbury, for I find at Lichfield the following will :—

Isabel Culcheth of Wappenbury, Widow. 5 June 1727.

A lease is being made out to her from the Lord Clifford of a house in Wappenbury. She leaves it to Robert Freeman alias Clayton, gent., in trust for her nephew Charles Butler, and her other property in trust for her nephews Charles Butler, Alban Butler, and James Butler. She appoints the said Robert Freeman alias Clayton executor. Witnesses : John Kol [? Kel], Frances Reeve, john Tayler. On the 30th December, 1727, Robert Freeman alias Clayton renounced administration in favour of Toby Chauncey, Esq., principal creditor, and saled with : A cross between four roundels, impaling two bars, on a chief three mullets.

The Culcheths of Wappenbury were Roman Catholics—see "The Family of Middlemore" (Phillimore and Co.). Reeve was also a Roman Catholic surname in Warwickshire. John Tayler was probably a Tayler of Fockbury, Worcestershire. "Toby Chauncy" is a name that sounds familiar, but I cannot locate it. Of Robert Freeman alias Clayton I know nothing.

Finally, I would say that it is a pleasure to take some trouble to help fellow genealogists, and one would gladly do so more frequently (with the Editor's permission) in these pages. But one rarely receives from the writer whose work one illustrates even the courtesy of an appreciative post-card, and it would seem therefore that one's labours in aid of others are superfluous.

Reviews.

Visitation of England and Wales. Volume XV. Printed at Private Press, and Edited by Frederick Arthur Crisp, F.S.A. 1908.

This volume again renews the pleasure we had when Vol. I. was issued in 1893, and we are glad to say it keeps up its own nobility in appearance. Although the present Editor, Mr. F. A. Crisp, has compiled the major part of the volumes himself since the loss of Dr. Howard, by death, in whose conception the Series was, and superintended by the ability of the Editor, this present volume again is all that any connoisseur of printing could desire. Carefully edited and printed on the finest of laid papers, it has no parallel that we are aware of among the literature of the day, and favoured as we were by both Dr. Howard and Mr. Crisp in issuing the first volume of the Series, we find the whole of the volumes are as well produced at the private press maintained by the Editor as when started; coupled with such a great consideration as he having to compile each pedigree and authenticated by the family, with the arms correctly drawn to most of the pedigrees given; and besides that, one family shewing three beautifully executed silhouettes of Mr. and Mrs. Woodthorpe of Bobbingworth and their daughter Lucy, the wife of William Holroyd, Esq., and shewn by her son Sir Charles Holroyd. The whole volume is enriched by a very ample Index, besides having additions and corrections given of deaths, etc., since its predecessors were printed, and it makes as substantial a volume as one can desire.

The Shallcross Pedigrees. Edited by the Rev. W. H. Shawcross, F.R.Hist.S., Vicar of Bretforton, co. Worcester. Hemsworth: C. E. Turner. 1908.

This is a foolscap folio volume of upwards of 200 pp., printed on one side only of a stout paper, and produced in such a manner that makes one regret that the Editor did not consult some one familiar with the production of such works, else the Preface to it would never have been in such small type or so compressed as it is. Had the Author adopted the same style of book as his friend, W. H. G. Bagshawe, Esq., of Ford Hall, did in his history of the Bagshawe family, his work on the Shallcross family would have been worthily produced, as the material throughout is worth preserving, and his labour of love much enhanced in appearance. The origin of the surname, armorial bearings, the Charters from Henry III.'s date (1216—1272), and pedigrees given throughout, all involve an immensity of work for which the Author is to be congratulated upon, besides the list of counties given where the registers have been searched for the name, thus giving a mass of information to his readers; and the Work is properly indexed both for places and persons.

The list of subscribers shews how useful such a painstaking work is appreciated, as the Author has spared no pains to complete the whole by illustrating it so well with portraits, arms, etc., and the views of Shallcross Hall (built about 1723—36), and of several churches.

The Genealogists' Pocket Library. Vol. I.: Some Special Studies in Genealogy. In Three Chapters: I., "American Emigrants, and how to trace their English Ancestry," by Gerald Fothergill; II., "Quaker Records," by Josiah Newman; and III., "The Genealogy of the Submerged," by Charles A. Bernau. Walton-on-Thames: Charles A. Bernau. 1909. Also Volumes II.—V.

This triple arrangement in the First Number of the "Pocket Library" is at once interesting on account of the views we get on distinct subjects, and the first one, on Americans and Genealogy, is to explain the connection between the settler and his English ancestors, and how they may be traced. Taking our own experience, we are continually being asked by American correspondents how to find out the original home in England of their ancestors, and in many cases not giving us the slightest clue where they sprang from, although they fix the date as far back as the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, involving, if attempted, searchings occupying weeks to obtain. The information the Author gives is to consult the Custom House records and also the Exchequer records, giving the licences from Charles I., but very few of the books have been preserved. The Author has in his possession the details of 6000 emigrants in 1773-4-5, lists of Jacobite rebels and felons transported, forming an ample list to choose from; then he refers to the hated tax of Ship Money brought in by order of Charles I., and mentions the records of the Court of Star Chamber and the Recusant Rolls of 1671, embracing the Roman Catholics and Protestant Dissenters. Very properly he refers to District Registers of the Probate Court and Parish Registers, which start early enough to embrace the time of any emigration to America, as some few of the Registers begin from 1538 and onwards, and the necessity of printing such we have so often said ought to be a positive duty of each local clergyman to have done. Mr. Fothergill has in fact enumerated every possible reference, such as Marriage Licences, Records of Transfer of Land, Manor Court Rolls, Chancery Proceedings, Exchequer Court Pleadings, and with such a book in hand our American friends "may cease from troubling" strangers in England for information, as it is full of information that will satisfy the most indefatigable scarcher, and is produced in such a convenient size that it forms a nice pocket companion on any genealogical pursuit.

"The Quaker Records," by Mr. Josiah Newman, begins by stating what a great organiser George Fox was, for after the first London Yearly Meeting in 1668 he issued a manifesto to his followers, explaining the importance of keeping Minute Books of all Church affairs, which were kept up by an appointed registrar in each meeting, until the Registration Act of 1837, and 1622 separate registers may be searched at Somerset House, besides all the admirable books started by George Fox two hundred years previously. The Quakers still keep up a complete alphabetical index of persons appointed at each meeting, so that from 1650 the records are noted down to the present day. Mr. Newman concludes his very concise Quaker Records by mentioning not only the "Journal of the Friends' Historical Society," but other works printed in America, Ireland, Wales, London, and nine English counties, and the whole pamphlet records a mass of information about Quakers which is exceedingly valuable.

"The Genealogy of the Submerged," by Mr. Charles A. Bernau, contains some interesting details, such as the humble origin of Queen Anne, whose great-grandmother was a poor girl who stood behind the bar of a public house and who married the brewer, and secondly Sir Francis Aylesbury, becoming the mother of a daughter who married Lord Chancellor Hyde, whose daughter married James II. The Rev. W. Kemp Russell of Walton Vicarage asked the Author to look through about fifty bundles of old MSS. found in a cupboard there, and some of them proved to be title deeds and other records of importance to the parish, and besides these was a quantity of orders and bonds going back as far as 1654; and there were also certificates of all kinds, from paupers, apprentices, masters, and others. The little brochure is favoured with an Index Locorum and Nominum, and thus worthily concludes its information.

Volume II. has "Chancery Proceedings," by George F. T. Sherwood. This little volume of "Chancery Proceedings" is made by the Author as interesting as possible. It is computed that 100,000 documents are comprised in the early Chancery Proceedings from 1386 to 1558, and the Author gives a Chapter on the means of reference in dealing with the records in bulk before their contents are available for using. The Proceedings are favoured with indices of names and places, and the whole forms a neat cloth-bound book handy for daily use.

Volume III. is entitled "Royal Descents," by the Rev. W. G. D. Fletcher, F.S.A., and "Scottish Records," by J. Bolam Johnson, C.A. For royal descents there is no dearth, as, for instance, the Bodleian Library has one where a direct lineal descent through the kings of Scotland and Britain is traced to Noah and Adam. Altogether the paper is very interesting, written as it is by a gentleman who is an excellent genealogist.

"The Scottish Records," by Mr. J. Bolam Johnson, begins with the charters of Edgar 1098—1106, but many had been lost or destroyed. The Author gives a General Register of Reversions, etc., in all parts of the country, and also Registers of Muster Rolls, Entails, Grants of Arms, and Armorial Bearings from 1672, and Genealogies from 1727 to date. Although not claimed that the lists are complete and exhaustive, still the Author has been at immense pains to supply what he has given his readers, indicating the nature of what is available in his Paper, which is amply indexed.

The Fourth Volume is entitled "The Churchyard Scribe," by Alfred Stapelton. It gives concise directions for recording inscriptions in churchyards and burial grounds, and in 106 pages are comprised concise plans for the best way to take down inscriptions verbatim, shewing, as we should suggest, an upright mark at the end of each line. Our Author adopts small slips of paper for noting down each inscription, and those previous to 1709 to be taken down as they are written, spelling the proper names as they are given, notwithstanding variations. Accuracy of transcription is of course of prime importance. After giving excellent directions respecting sunken tombstones, how best to decipher figures, etc., he gives some copies of curious epitaphs still to be seen. Many examples are given, similar to those we issued in a work entitled "In Search of Gravestones Old and Curious," by Mr. W. T. Vincent, and some published by Mr. Cansick. Those given by Mr. Stapelton are chiefly from Nottinghamshire, and they add much to the interest of his readers.

The Fifth Volume, just issued, is on "Quarter Sessions," by Mr. W. Bradbrook, "Seize Quartiers," by Mr. Percival Lucas, and "Records of Patented Inventions," by Mr. Percy C. Rushen. Mr. Bradbrook makes his subject as interesting as possible by giving the various duties involved in the account of the Sessions, which comprised Vagrants' Passes, allowances for men on militia duty, stating how much the wife and children were allowed, and orders for impressing wagons and horses for the military on march, besides furnishing passes for soldiers and their families. Then there were the coroners' inquests, records of the county jail, county children, etc., and as the writer justly says, he is not aware of Quarter Session Records having been dealt with before. He has done his work well, and furnishes particulars known only to a few, for which the public will be thankful.

The second Paper on "Seize Quartiers," by Mr. Percival Lucas, is a subject in heraldry often seized upon by persons anxious to trace their family to some royal descent. As the writer says, Chancery Proceedings give valuable information to the searcher, and he adds particulars of quartering coats, also of the Escutcheon of Pretence, and the rule respecting heiresses, etc. Genealogy is made more interesting, and the public is enlightened a great deal by the pains-taking care that the writer has shewn in his Paper throughout.

The third Paper is on Patented Inventions, of which the public knows but little, and the Author, Mr. Percy C. Rushen, begins by giving an account of the records, and the historical basis in 1623 from which began the practice of granting patents for inventions, and now almost every nation has adopted the scheme, until in 1852 the practice in England has become so vast as to require a special Government Office to be created, now called the Patent Office ; a library has also been formed, and records since 1852 inaugurated. The Specifications since then are printed as Blue Books, and they are now contained in 690 boxes. The particulars and many more are furnished by the Author, and the information given would shew any patentee how to proceed either in searching for patents or in taking out new ones.

The five volumes are so conclusive on the subjects they treat of that the genealogical world owes a great debt of gratitude to Mr. Charles A. Bernau, and we shall look out with interest for the next forthcoming volumes, the handy size of which will be of assistance to "those who run can read," and the price being within the reach of all.

The Journal of the Ex Libris Society. Vol. XVIII., Parts 11 and 12, for November and December 1908. London : A. and C. Black, Soho Square.

THIS double Part begins by paying a very just tribute of esteem for the late Hon. Gerald Ponsonby, who died Nov. 30, 1908. In Notes on Public School Plates the Rev. J. Alfred Ross introduces three plates of Winchester and those of Marlborough and Haileybury College. The frontispiece plate is that of the Rev. Sir George Ralph Fetherston, by Mr. W. P. Barrett, and there is given the plate of Mr. J. Wilson, Professor of Phrenology, only remarkable as shewing a collection of skulls, one of which might have been Darwin's pre-historic duplicate of Man. There are also two plates by Mr. Barrett of Sir David Lionel Goldsmid Stern-Salomons, Bart., shewing a well-designed plate with excellent mantling, one plate being only about an inch long with fine work minimised in it. With the plate of Torquay Carnegie Library and six festoon plates the Part concludes.

Fenland Notes and Queries. Vol. VII., Part 80 for January 1909. Edited by the Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. Peterborough: George C. Caster, Market Place.

THIS Part begins with an account of the Triangular Bridge at Crowland, which originally was built by the abbots, and there is an account of it in Edred's Charter of A.D. 943. As a bridge it was useless, for the centre rises to a point some feet higher than the base, so that it is impossible for horses to use it, or wheeled traffic. It has been reckoned as a puzzle for antiquaries for centuries. There is an excellent plate given of it from a sketch of Dr. William Stukely in 1721. The Part adds that Tennyson visited Crowland Abbey in 1852, but he made no allusion to the antiquated bridge, based as it is where the rivers Nyne and Welland meet, but without any central pillar to support it, and that each base of the bridge stands in a different county. Church Inscriptions at Holbeach are interesting, likewise several other short papers.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. Vol. XVII., No. 1, January 1909. Published by the Virginia Historical Society, Richmond, U.S.A.

THIS Part begins with its continued article on the Randolph Manuscript, and then resumes its history of Virginia in 1641-49, and among other petitions to the Lords of the Privy Council is one from the proprietor of the "Mayflower" for transporting twenty-four servants to Virginia free of customs and other duties. The licence was granted.

There is an excellent note on the exploits of Sir Thomas Lunsford, one of the most trusted and valiant officers in Charles I.'s service, who gained much notoriety in the service of the French, when he raised a regiment in Picardy in 1636. There is an excellent portrait of him given in military costume. Miscellaneous Colonial Documents and Virginia Gleanings in England follow, and the usual papers on Genealogy and Notes and Queries conclude an interesting Part.

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record. Vol. XL., No. 1 for January 1909. New York: 226 West 58th Street.

THERE is an excellent steel portrait of Mr. James William Beekman, late Lieutenant-General in New York from 1891 to 1897, who died in 1904; a good account of him begins the Part. A Digest of Essex Wills follows, mostly those persons connected with the American Colonies; and then the lineage of the Hoppe-Hoppen-Hoppen family follows, which shews nothing of peculiarity beyond its name, and that of the Knickerbocker family is continued but not finished. The Society's Proceedings and Book Notices conclude the Part, which has good examples of registers of various kinds.

LITERARY NOTE.—Messrs. Jack announce the issue of a new complete Guide to Heraldry in one volume. Hitherto comprehensive books on Heraldry have been expensive, and those that are not costly are scrappy. The publishers will condense into this Work, which is by A. C. Fox-Davies, Editor of "Armorial Families," etc., the entire range of the law and practice of Heraldry. Each part of the science and each charge will be dealt with and fully explained, and the Work will be illustrated with some 800 designs (including plates in colour), executed by Mr. Graham Johnston, Herald Painter of the Lyon Court, Edinburgh.

The MS. from which this Register was collected was burnt in a fire which occurred in the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall in February 1786, it being lost with a matchless series of documents illustrating the condition and progress of trade within the City. The volume represents all that is known to exist of the Registers of Freemen. The principal document is the Egerton MS. 2408 in the British Museum, purchased by the Trustees in 1877. The MS. consisted only of thirty leaves, the margins being burnt on all sides, and holes through some of the leaves. The second MS. was bought at public auction in 1896 by the Guildhall Library, having been previously purchased by the Rev. Henry Cross in 1849 at an old curiosity shop.

The Work has been very carefully edited by Mr. Charles Welch, and in giving an Admission by Apprenticeship in Latin he appends to it a translation. Where a cook wanted to purchase he had to pay £20, but admission by apprenticeship was 14*s.* 10*d.*, whereas those by patrimony ranged from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 15*s.* 4*d.* The total sum is given on each page, and where the names are not decipherable blank dots are inserted. Every care has been taken to ensure accuracy, and the Editor is to be congratulated on rescuing such an important document from oblivion.

BY CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A.,

Honorary Secretary of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society, etc.

The MS. from which this Register was collected was burnt in a fire which occurred in the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall in February 1786, it being lost with a matchless series of documents illustrating the condition and progress of trade within the City. The volume represents all that is known to exist of the Registers of Freemen. The principal document is the Egerton MS. 2408 in the British Museum, purchased by the Trustees in 1877. The MS. consisted only of thirty leaves, the margins being burnt on all sides, and holes through some of the leaves. The second MS. was bought at public auction in 1896 by the Guildhall Library, having been previously purchased by the Rev. Henry Cross in 1849 at an old curiosity shop.

The Work has been very carefully edited by Mr. Charles Welch, and in giving an Admission by Apprenticeship in Latin he appends to it a translation. Where a cook wanted to purchase he had to pay £20, but admission by apprenticeship was 14*s.* 10*d.*, whereas those by patrimony ranged from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 15*s.* 4*d.* The total sum is given on each page, and where the names are not decipherable blank dots are inserted. Every care has been taken to ensure accuracy, and the Editor is to be congratulated on rescuing such an important document from oblivion.

Price 1s. 6d. per quarter, by post 1s. 8d. A year's Subscription (January to October), if paid in advance, 6s. post free.

PEDIGREE

OF THE

Family of Wall of Worcester,

1689—1900.

London: MITCHELL HUGHES and CLARKE, 140 Wardour Street, W.

GRANT OF ARMS TO FRANCIS POWER, OF BLETCHINGTON, CO. OXFORD, 1601.*

[The colour of the bordure is not given.]

"Francis Power of Blechington in Com̄: Oxon̄: 8 June 1601."
Camden's Grants, Vol. II., f. 36^{b} (i.e. dockets only).

EVERARD GREEN,
Rouge Dragon.

Heralds' College,
21 February 1908.

NOTE.—For pedigrees of this family see "The Visitations of the County of Oxford," printed by the Harleian Society, pp. 209—211. The quarterings are: Quarterly: 1st and 4th grand quarters, quarterly, 1st and 4th, Power of Bletchington; 2nd and 3rd, Power or De la Poer of Ireland; 2nd grand quarter, D'Amory of Bletchington; 3rd grand quarter Cottesford, which was brought in by D'Amory. It seems clear that the arms granted by Camden in 1601 to Francis Power were founded on those of D'Amory. Whether the Irish coat was included on account of a descent from that ancient stock or merely to do duty as "Power ancient," does not appear.

Descent in the Male Line of the Family of Grazebrook from 1065, with Proofs for each Generation.*

[B. Gen. 6.] Idonea, Lady of Essendine, the sole heiress of this branch, who conveyed the chief lordship of the 7½ knights' fees (the younger brother's share at the Conquest), as well as many other estates, of which a partial list will be presently given, to her husband Robert de Veteri Ponte, who was Baron of Appleby and Sheriff of Westmoreland 4 John (1202). The hereditary sheriffdom of Westmoreland belonged to the De Morevilles, whose surviving heiress Matildis conveyed it to her husband William, by whom she was mother of Robert de Veteri Ponte, to whom it had been recently restored (see "Archæologia," lviii., p. 362). Before above date we find this Robert as Sheriff of Notts and Derby accounting for the firm of the Honor of Tickhill in 1201-2, also for the tallage and Soca ("Rot. Cancell., 3 Johis" (1201-2), p. 309). In the same Record (p. 352) he owes xx m̃ and 1 palefrey for having custody of the lands and heir of Richard de Sciringtoñ, and at p. 346 he pays iiij li. for that same firm of Scirington for this year under Bucks and Bedford.

On 28 October 1203 (5 John) Robert de Veteri Ponte had a grant, for his better support in the King's service, of certain lands, to hold to him and his heirs by his then wife (Pat. Roll, 21 Ric. II. (1397-8), pars ultima, m. 16, per Inspeximus). We see (p. 108) that John de Bulli had married Idonea before 1164-5, and he did not die till 1213. The above date and quotation are from Blore's "Hist. of Rutland," 1811, p. 14, and I did not at the time verify the reference given in proof. An Inspeximus may come at any date.

On 5 August 1205 (7 John) Sciatis nos dedisse, etc., dilecto et fideli Rob de Vet^{o}iponte custody of the lands and heir of William de London of Tinsley until the heir be of full age, according to the custom of England; also we concede to him the marriage of the aforesaid heir and of Florentia, who was wife of the said William, so that it be without disparagement ("Rot. Chart. in turri Lond. asservati," p. 156^{b}).

In 1208 the constableship of Tikehill and the Castle were conferred upon Robert de Vet^{o}iponte ("Rot. Oblat et Fin.," p. 419).

In 1212 Robert de Vipont grants to the Priory of Heppe (now called Shapp) in Westmoreland the ville of Renegill, as described in the Charters of Matildis his mother and of Yvo his brother. Dated on the Sabbath Day, 25 May 1212, apud Cliburne (Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1665, vol. ii., p. 595, l. 47^{b}).

Claims for the Honor and Castle of Tickhill on the part of Alice, Countess of Ewe, and Ralph de Ysendon (or Lusignan), her husband (see p. 20), had for some years been rumbling in the distance! [Placitorum in domo Capitulari Westmonaster. Abbreviatio, ed. 1811, fo. 24^{a}]: De Term Pasche et de Term Trin., 1 John (1199). "The Knights of the Honor of Thikehill say under their oath that the Earl of Ewe has no lawful right in the Honor aforesaid, nor ever had entry therein, unless in the time of King Stephen, who at that date committed the Ballivum of the Castle to Henry, Earl of Ewe, with 'forinsecis t^{o}ris' (that is, payments of aids, etc., outside the Castle), and William de Clerfei guarded the 'motam' of the Castle until the capture of King Stephen, as Constable for the King; but after the capture of King Stephen, Henry, father of the Lord the now

* Communicated by Geo. Grazebrook, Esq., F.S.A.—continued from p. 203.

King, took possession of the Castle, and it has remained ever since in the hands of the Lord the King, but afterwards the Earl of Ewe was taken with the King. But altho' the said Earl recovered seisin of the land he recovered nothing in the aforesaid Castle."

Now, so long as the younger branch of De Busli, descendants in the direct male line of that great family to whom it was granted at the Conquest, held their lands directly of the King in capite as Lord of the Castle and Honor, they were well contented to remain so. They could not hold by a more honourable service, which had never been broken except during the two years flagrant usurpation by the wicked Robert de Belesme, and except for a very short time after the accession of Stephen, 1135, when the Earl of Ewe was recognized as owner until 1141, in which year he was captured at Lincoln, and these estates were forfeited by the Empress Maud. This great Honor was afterwards committed to Ranulf, Earl of Chester, as a bribe to ensure his allegiance in that troublous reign, but only for a few months, when it was taken back into the King's hands.

I had better explain what led up to this fresh disturbance. Under the peace of Parthenai, which was concluded on Trinity Sunday, 1214, King John had agreed with the Lusignans to restore to Ralph de Ysendon, the 8th Earl of Ewe (p. 20), the Honor of Tickhill and the Rape of Hastings (Rymer's "Fœdera," i., p. 125); and consequently we find (Pat. Roll, 16 John, m. 8, 1214) the Lord the King writing to John de Bassingburn that he has received by the hands of Mathew his servant the Letters Patent, by the which he hath rendered unto him his Castle of Tickhill, and that without delay he deliver that castle to the men of the same Earl, which will bring his Letters Patent; also (Patent, 16 John, m. 10, 1214-15) Ralph, Earl of Anjo, and Alice his wife had the Castle of Tickhill, etc.; also (Letters Patent, 1 Henry III., m. 3, 1217) "The King to Robert de Vipont greeting. We command you that ye deliver without delay to Henry, Earl of Augy, his Castle of Tykehull, which is in our hand." It mentions also Warin the son of said Earl. "Henry" is a mistake for Ralph, who did not die till May 1219; but I quote these from Dodsworth's Abstracts, Harl. MS. 801. Robert de Veteri Ponte was, however, at that time in possession of the Castle and Honor and refused to give it up, maintaining that his wife Idonea had a better right to inherit, being the direct descendant and legal representative of the holders in capite in Domesday, and, if the Crown waived its rights to the Honor as an escheat, that then it should come to him jure uxoris, and he commenced proceedings in the Court of Exchequer in 1219.

The trial came on at Westminster, September 1219 (Michaelmas, 4 Henry III. et incipiente 5th), and Idonea's pedigree was declared from Jordanus, the nephew of Roger de Busli; and, as is so common, a generation was omitted—he was great-nephew! The Countess Augi demurred to this pedigree, and pointed out that she descended from Beatrix, the daughter of Roger I. and heir to her brother Roger II., who succeeded on his father's death, and she succeeded to him! A full report is given among Dodsworth's MSS. at the Bodleian, vol. cxiv., folio 8. A final Concord was reached 6 Henry III. (1221), but exact date is not given at Bodleian, vol. cxxi., fol. 169, Coram Hubert de Burgo, Justiciario Angliæ, and eight other Justices, by which Robert and Idonea remiserant all their right and claim to the Castle and Vill of Tickhill, excepting 6½ feoda which they already held in Maltby, Sandbec, Kymberworth, Scausby, Faldam, Stanford-on-Sore, Peverlthorp, Brodesworth, and Torlakeston, and the Countess gave them one hundred libras sterlingorum (Record Office, Feet of Fines, York, 6 Henry III. [now No. 25], in Octaves of the Purification of the Virgin (2 February 1222), at Westminster).

The particulars are also given Curiæ Regis, Roll No. 77, Mich., 3-4 Henry III. (1219-20), No. 77, rot. 1, wherein dñs Rex was, by agreement, to commit to Robert the Castle of Carleol and comitatū, in exchange for the Castle of Tykehull. It was a bold venture, but Robert and Idonea had to come forward then or for ever after hold their peace! The Countess of Ewe was a very formidable antagonist. Her family relationships brought her great influence both at Court and on the Bench. Her mother was Matilda, daughter of Hamelin Plantagenet, Earl of Warren and Surrey; her husband Ralph de Lusignan, often called in English records Ysendon, Earl of Ewe jure uxoris, was their second son, and was brother of Hugh de Lusignan, who married the widow of King John. Ralph died May 1219 and was buried at Foucarmont, so Alice, Countess of Ewe, was then a widow. Hubert de Burgh, Chief Justiciary of England, had married Beatrix de Warren of Wormgay, and so was her uncle. She was received in England with the most profuse welcome. William de Warren wrote to Hubert de Burgh in 1219 notifying the arrival of his own niece in England, and in September in that year she went down carrying letters under the Great Seal commanding the knights and free tenants of the Honor of Tickhill to render suit and service (Pat. Roll, 19 September 3 Henry III, m. 2, 1219), "Mittimus ad vos Aliciam Comitissam Augi dominam vestram"—that you make faith and fidelity, etc. William de Warren also accompanied her, and in Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1655, vol. i., p. 838, l. 64^{b}, we find a Charter, by which Haelesia Comitissa Augi, quondam uxor Radulfi de Ysondun, Comitis Augy, "in viduitate et in propriâ potestate" grants to Roche the grange of Aggecroft and the wood of Lundric, etc. Testibus Willelmo Comite Warenne "avunculo meo," and others. Given at Tickhill 1219. (See also "Rot. Scacc. Norm.," p. ccxxxii., and "Sussex Archæol. Collect.," vi., p. 110.)

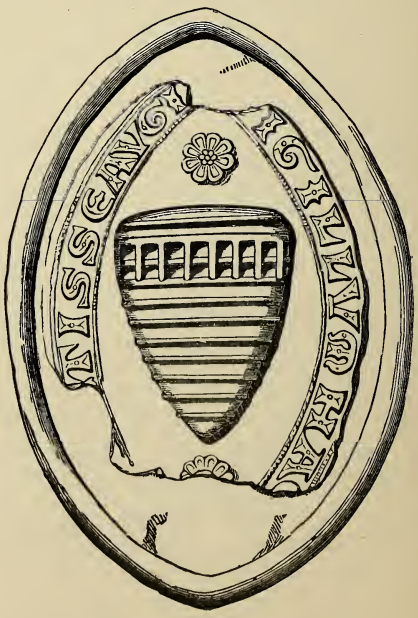
We need not further exemplify the history of the Countess Augi. In 1245, in the levy of aid for marriage of the eldest daughter of Henry III., she was charged £62 10*s.* for 62½ knights' fees in Sussex and £60 15*s.* for 60¾ knights' fees in Yorkshire. Woodcuts of her seals were published in the "Archæological Journal," vol. xi. (1854), p. 367, and are so very interesting from the likeness of the lady and her costume, the unusually fine execution at the date, between 1234 and 1242 [but as the Countess left England in 1225 and never returned, I feel sure 1234 is ten years too late], and the heraldry upon the counterseal, that, on my application to the Royal Archæological Institute, they have allowed me to reproduce them here. Ralph was the second son, and the shield shews the arms of Lusignan with a label of eight points for his difference. We find many of the "Dicta" so authoritatively put forward by later Heralds are NOT according to ancient usage.



In the Pat. Rolls, Henry III., 1221, m. 5, Robert de Vipont had leave to lease for three years all his lands, etc., "a quo tempore quo gentem suam pro se mittet peregre versus Jerosolimam, etc.;" and this introduces an interesting heraldic note. In the list of arms there shewn, by his seal, Robert bore a lion passant crowned; while those given by Ivo his elder brother had the lion without a crown, which it would thus appear were the ancient bearings. John, the son of Robert, bore annulets as used by his posterity. (Nicolson and Burn, ed. 1777, p. 267; Mr. Machel's account of the seals in Blenkinsop's Papers relating to Shapp Abbey; Ivo is mentioned in Geoffrey de Vinsauf's Chronicle.)

Robert de Veteri Ponte died in the year 1227. At any rate, it was known to the King at Westminster on 1 February 1228, when he issued a close letter to Hubert de Burgo, Earl of Kent, committing to him the custody of the lands and heir of Robert de Vipont until full age; and on the same day mandates in accordance were sent to the Sheriffs of Dorset, Notts, Southants, and to the Constable of Richmond (Close Roll, 12 Henry III., m. 13). And on 27 February the Sheriff of co. York was commanded to enquire what had become of, and who had the catalla which were sold after the death of the said Robert de Veteri Ponte [catalla applies to all moveable goods]; also, on 17 May 1228, it was demanded from the Abbot of Hope as to any arms deposited in his house, "nisi idem Robertus ante obitum suum arma predicta legaverit." These are notes from "Rott. Litt. Claus." Corresponding entries appear in "Excerpta e Rot. Fin." during March and April 1228, with an ominous note—"De debetis q' Rob'tus de Vet^{o}i Ponte debuit Dño Rege;" and on 8 May 1230 (14 Henry III., m. 6) there is a gracious close letter, "pro uxore Roberti de Vipont," commanding the Sheriff of Roteland that Idonea and her men of Essenden are to be left in peace. From the above entries it seems to me that Robert had died during the autumn of 1227.

Idonea gave several Charters of lands in Austrefield and Bawtry in the Blythe Chartulary, one dated 1232 is given at p. 157. But in Dugdale's "Mon.," vol. ii., p. 522 l. 1^{a}, is another, which must I think be dated 1228: "Idonea de Vesteri ponte, etc., Noveritis me, in libera viduitate et propria potestate mea, etc., pro Salute animæ Domini Roberti de Veteri ponte quondam mariti mei et pro Salute animæ meœ," give and confirm fratribus militiæ Templi 13½ bovates de hereditate mea in Oistrefeld, etc. This donation, as above declared, I make to the Knights Templars for the sustentation of one Chaplain, who shall celebrate imperpetuum in domo ipsorum fratrum London pro anima dicti Roberti, etc. Test. Domino Ricardo de Turry and others. I cannot say when de Turry became Prior, but think this must have passed very shortly after she became a widow? And in the List of Knights Templars possessions (drawn up in 1434) ["Monasticon," vol. ii., p. 545, l. 54^{a}] what seems to be the same donation is dated 1227, but is attributed to Robert the husband; it seems to me that the date is correct? But we really have said enough of Idonea de Vipont. She lived the lady of Kimberworth, in great state, for many many years (Hunter's "South Yorkshire," vol. ii., p. 27.)

In Dugdale's "Monasticon," 1651, vol. i., p. 837, l. 60^{b}, Idonea de Veteri ponte, in viduitate, etc., gives to God and St. Mary and the Monks of Roche, at the dedication of their church of Roche, my whole manor of Sandbec, with my body, etc. In the same vol., p. 836, l. 26^{b}, is this curious and solemn oath, sworn by Richard de Boyvill, Knight, declaring upon oath, before witnesses, that on St. Giles' Day, 1 September in the year 1241, my Lady Idonea de Bulli of her "mera et spontanea" will, and free power of her body, with great deliberation of mind, gave to the church of Roche her whole manor of Sandbec, etc., before many friends and faithful, then present (with a list of witnesses). "In crastino Sancti Ægidii, 1 Sept." The Charter of this donation was written and signed with the "great seal of my lady and also with her private seal, in crastino nativitatis beatæ Mariæ 8 Sept. proximo sequenti."

This most unusual and solemn declaration was needed because of a grand Assize which Robert de Veteri Ponte had brought against the Abbot of Roche.

Robert had died in 1227, and so the suit had been in progress for at least fourteen years. The Abbot claimed the whole Manor of Sandbeck. We see by the above-quoted Charter that Idonea de Veteri Ponte, so soon as she became a widow, with powers to act, had given to them "totum manerium meum de Sandbec cum corpore meo," etc. But the monks were not satisfied; they were always heaping up evidences and confirmations of their Title Deeds, and they considered it necessary—since this Suit had been commenced and was on record, without any decision—that they should have a verdict attached to the end, and so cancel the original breve Regis at the beginning.

In her last illness Idonea had made this final gift! On 13 March 1242 Alicia, Comitissa Augi, gave c. m̃ to have the wardship of the lands which had been of Idonea de Vipont and which were of her fief until the lawful age of the heir (Rot. Fin., 26 Henry III., rot. 16; Rot. Originalium Abbrev.); but on the 19th Oct. 1241 at Westminster the King had already ordered the Sheriffs of Bucks, etc., to take into the King's hands all the lands, etc., which were of Idonea. So we see that by the 19th October 1241 the death of Idonea was already known in London, as proved by the above references to Excerpta e Rot. Fin.; and thus ended the direct line of Family B.

I can prove still more closely the date of Idonea de Vipont's death, and in rather a roundabout way, but quite satisfactory. The de Buslis held lands in Austrefield and Bawtre under the Fossards, whose heiress married Robert de Turnham, and his heiress married Peter de Malo lacu.

An inquisition post mortem 31 Henry III., No. 35 (1246), deals with a dispute as to these lands, and declares that Peter de Manley, when he took his journey to the Holy Land, had granted to Sir Gerard la Grue the first wardship or escheat that shall fall in, and strictly enjoined Reginald his Steward so to do. And when the Lady Idonea de Veteri Ponte deceased Reginald put Sir Gerard in seisin. Gerard had seisin on 1 November 1241, All Saints Day, and was in seisin for eight days. And then came the bailiffs of Sir Nicholas de Molis and removed Gerard and his men from the custody of the said lands; and on the 6th January 1241-2 the King's bailiffs took possession for the Sheriff, etc.

In the inquisition post mortem on Peter de Manley 7 Edward I. (1278) the heir of Robert de Veteri Ponte is said to hold two knights' fees in Bawtry and Austerfield.

In order finally to shew the descent of several of the manors mentioned in this History, I have extended for two or three generations the skeleton pedigree, and now give a very succinct statement. Idonea and Robert had only one son John de Vipont, who had already died. Rot. Fin. 25 Henry III., m. 4, writ dated 25 July 1241; and in Rot. Fin 19 November 1242 the King gave to John Fitz Geoffrey the marriage of Robert, son and heir of this John de Veteri Ponte for a fine of 200 m̃. We see in the short pedigree that Robert II. the grandson of Idonea and Robert (I.), who was under age in 1241-2, afterwards married Isabel, the daughter of his guardian Fitz Geoffrey, and died of his wounds in battle under Simon de Montfort.

This Robert de Veteri Ponte, by Isabel his wife, left only two surviving daughters, namely, Isabel (primogenita) lady of the moiety of Essendine, who married Roger de Clifford, junior, Baron of Westmoreland, jure uxoris. She was of full age 15 June 1269 (Inq. 53 Henry III., No. 44) and a widow in 1282 (Inq. p.m. on Roger) and did homage for her lands held in capite as da. and coheir of Robert de Veteri Ponte (Rot. Origin. Abbrev. 2 Edward I., rot. 4, 1282-3). A good many particulars and references are given (Yorkshire Archæological Society, Record Series, vols. xii., p. 257, and xxiii., p. 142).

Robert de Clifford, son and heir of Roger and Isabel, was under age on 3 Nov. 1293. (Harl. MS. 801, fo. 63ª.)

The Inq. p.m. on Isabella de Clifford, widow of Roger (19-20 Edward I., Series i., file 48, July 1292) "Robert her son and heir will be 18 on 29 Sept. 1292." "She had given to her mother 5 m̃. per annum for her life." This Robert was killed at Bannockburn in 1314.

The Inq. p.m. on Roger de Clifford, junior (2 Edward I., No. 36a, 1282-3, the King's breve is dated 12 December 1282), gives this list of his estates:—

Co. Bedford.—Eyworth. Every detail given; held in capite of the King for the fourth part of a Knight's Fee, etc. Co. York.—In conjunction with D'ns Roger de Layborne they hold Maltby for 1 Knight's Fee; in right of their wives the coheirs of Rob. de Veteri Ponte; and pertinent to the manor of Maltby are 6½ Knights' Fees, each of which pays in the name of Castle Ward yearly 10s 8d. All particulars given; the value of Maltby (including 29 hens) £19 0s 4¾d per annum. Co. Rutland.—Esenden. Held of the Bishop of Lincoln as 1 Knight's Fee, total yearly value £29 5s 6d. Co. Bucks.—The half of Bocland, held of Bishop of Lincoln. Co. Lincoln.—Morton. Held of the gift of Baldwin Wak, per homage and forinsecu servitiu, £9 4s 4d total yearly value. All of these were de hereditate uxoris suis. [Roger had died vitâ patris, and so held nothing of ancestral lands.]

The second da. and coheir, Idonea de Veteri Ponte, married first Roger de Leyburn (Inq. p.m. 12 Edward I., No. 17, 1284), who held nothing of his own inheritance, but in co. York in right of his wife Idonea, da. and one of the coheirs of Robert de Vipont, the manor of Kimberworth and the manor of Maltby, by the service of 1 Knight's Fee, and that John their son was 3 years of age on 2 Feb. 1284, but he cannot have reached full age, because Idonea's lands came to her 2nd husband. These lands and their values are thus declared in the Inquisition. Co. York.—Kymberworth. By the service of 1 Knight's Fee, value per annum £19 18s 10½d; Maltby, by the service of 1 Knight's Service to the Castle of Tickhill; Austerfield and Bawtry, held of Peter de Manley by the service of a sparrow-hawk yearly, which two manors are worth per annum £16 18s 4d. Co. Northants, jure uxoris, which Idonea is 22 years of age; Parva Brynton and Neubotle, which were given by William quondam Comes Fferar̃ to John de Vipont in free marriage, without any service, and are worth £13 12s 5d per annum. Co. Notts.—Perlthorpe, de Tyckhill, by the service of 2 Knights' Fees, and is worth ? Co. Beds.—Eyworth. Held of the King per Serjeantcy and the payment of 2s 9d yearly to the Sheriff, and is worth [the totals of a good many items are given]. Co. Bucks.—Half the manor of Bockland, held of the Bishop of Lincoln by military service, worth per annum £14 5s 6d.

On the Monday of Easter week 1292, that is on 7 April, Idonea de Veteri Ponte (or de Leybourne) confirmed the privileges granted to Bawtry, and the charter carries her seal, viz.: On the dexter side three annulets for Vipont; impaling, on the sinister side, three lions for Leybourne. This does not mean that "the grey mare was the better horse," but only that her estates far exceeded those of her husband. I add this as of heraldic interest and an addition to what said at p. 257.

In 1301, 6 April (Rot. Fin. 30 Edward I., m. 12) Idonea, who held in capite and was the widow of Roger de Leyburn, paid a fine to marry whom she would of the King's Fealty (Yorkshire Archæological Soc. Records, vol. xxiii,, p. 12), and in October and November 1301 (Add. MS., Brit. Mus., No. 24,439, folio 79; also Feet of Fines) these lands, etc. were settled by final concord on Idonea and her husband John de Crumbwell, with remainder to the heirs of Idonea.

In 1326 (Rot. Fin. 19 Edward II., m. 10), John de Crumwell having stayed abroad beyond the limit of his licence, his estates were seized into the King's hands, who committed to the custody of Roger de Bilneye all the manors which are of the inheritance of Idonea, wife of John de Crumwell, by reason of the offence of the said John by continuing in partibus transmarinis (Rot. Originalium in Scacc. Abbrev., i., p. 299a). But there is a special clause in the King's writ that he shall permit Idonea to take all the issues and profits, all oxen, etc., all jewels in her chamber, etc., during the King's pleasure, and Bilney was to swear before the King that he would not send any part of the said property to John de Crumwell! This produced speedy obedience. Crumwell quickly returned, and in the Clause Roll, 1 Edward III., m. 21-22 (17 Feb. 1328) the several Sheriffs had directions to restore to John de Crumwell his several estates, of which a detailed list from the King's writ to Roger de Bilneye gives us : Co. Wilts—Manor of Wyntreslowe ; co. Bucks—Bokeland, Senclebergh, and Amundesham ; co. Beds—Eyworth ; co. Roteland—Essynden ; co. Linc.—Morton ; co. Notts—Peverelthorpe ; co. York—Malteby, Bawtre, and Kymberworth ; co. Warwick—Wyntreton ; co. Northants—Moulton, and certain lands in Yerdele and Pottespury ; in co. Derby three parts of the Manor of Staveley which are of the inheritance of Idonea.

Inq. p.m. 8 Edward III., first part, No, 66, 1344.—Idonea de Leyburn nupta Johanni de Crombewell held conjointly with John under Robert de Clifford, paying him annually a red rose during the life of Idonea, Wintreton, co. Warwick ; Pevelthorp, co. Notts, for fourth part of 1 Knight's Fee of the Honor of Tyckhill. In co. York Idonea and John her husband conjointly held until the day of her death Bawtre and Austerfield under the fine 1301-2, and to the heirs of the said John and Idonea and conjointly enjoyed the rental of £24. I think it probable there were other Inquisitions now missing [?].

By Patent (17 Edward II., prima pars., m. 22, 1323-4) John de Crumwell and Idonea had the King's licence to grant the Manor of Essendyne, held under the Bishop of Lincoln, to Edward, son of Hugh le Despenser the younger, which at her death passed to that family, together with other estates, viz., the Manors of Multon, Yardley, and Potters Pery in Northants ; Moreton, co. Linc. ; Peverelsthorpe, co. Notts ; and one-third part of Staveley, co. Derby, to be held by them of the King in capite. The Manor of Malteby returned to the Cliffords, and Eufemia de Clifford held it in dower at her death in 1394.

There is a tradition that the above family were descendants of Willam Chartres, Sheriff of Cork 1682, and Mayor of that City 1692. In his Will dated 28 November 1723, proved 14 February 1723-4, he mentions several children, viz., William, John, Thomas, Ralph, Rebecca, Dorothy, Jane, Susanna, Elizabeth (Mrs. Watkins), and appoints his sons William and John as executors. He also had a daughter Anne, wife of Thomas Rose of Cork, son of George Rose of Cunnigar, co. Limerick (see Marriage Articles, dated 18 May 1700). I should be obliged for any proof that the second son and executor, John Chartres, was the John Chartres of Knockaloho, co. Clare, whose Will was proved at Killaloe in 1735. John Chartres of "Clondrala" (Will dated 1765) held lands from George Rose of Aghabeg, co. Limerick, under long leases which did not expire until about 1875.

I should be glad to know any further particulars about the Chartres family. I received a good deal of the information embodied in the above pedigree from the late Mrs. Whitestone, of Clondigad, co. Clare (granddaughter of Richard Brew of Clonkerry and Frances Chartres his wife), and some of my other relatives. I must thank Mr. Peirce G. Mahony, Cork Herald, for his kindness in verifying several of the references for me.

SHORT SUMMARY.

I.

The Bazely family, formerly spelt Baseleye, have for many generations resided in Dover.

The first authentic record of their existence in that town is to be found in the parish registers of St. Mary's, Dover, in the sixteenth year of Elizabeth (1574).

The above Grant of Arms to the family on 6 August, 1784, shews that they claimed to have been resident in the county of Kent for several generations.

It is thought by some that the Baseleyes of Dover originally came from France, but the name, however, occurs in the early Calendars of the Principal Registry, and is also to be found in the counties of Devon, Cornwall, Oxford, and Northampton.

It would be interesting to discover where they really came from, prior to their settlement in Dover, and to find the connection, if such exists, between them and those other families of Bazely who settled in the above-named counties.

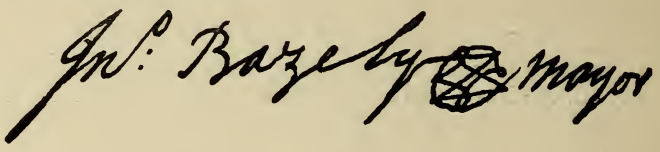
Where Biggin Gate stood reads an inscription :—

"Here stood Biggin gate
"Removed by order of the Common Council
"June 28, 1752, John Bazely, Mayor."

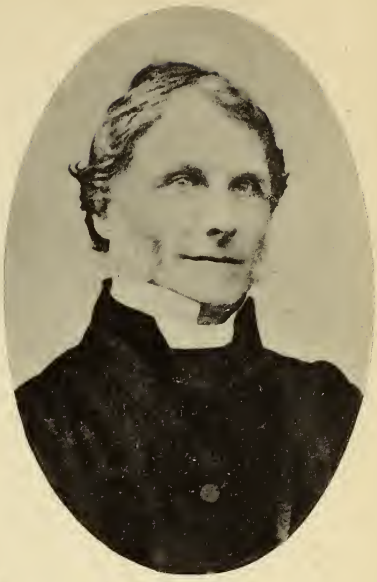
John Bazely's letters to Earl Hardwick during his mayoral tenure of office are preserved at the British Museum, No. 35,692, folios 465, 467, 470. In an Act of Parliament for amending, widening, and repairing the road from Dover to Barham Downs, county of Kent, passed in 26 George II., John Bazely, therein described as a Jurat of Dover, is appointed one of the trustees.

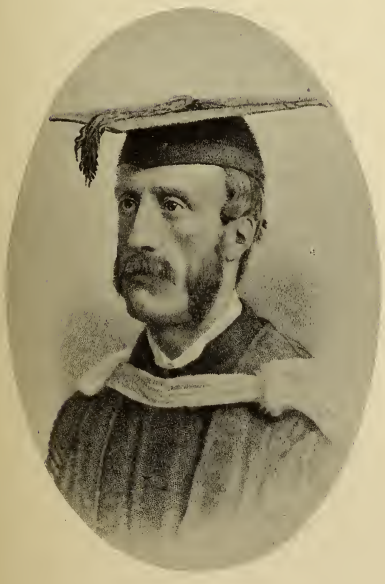


John Bazely (No. 1), 1740 to 1809. Admiral of the Blue. Born at Dover, died at Dover. Entered Navy, 1755 ; Lieutenant, 1760 ; Post Captain, 1778 ; Flag promotion, 1795 ; Vice-Admiral, 1799 ; Vice-Admiral of the White Squadron, 1804 ; Admiral of the Red Squadron, 1805 ; Admiral of the Blue, 1806 to 1809. In 1784 he took out a Grant of Arms at the College of Arms. ("Grants," vol. xv., p. 353, therein described as "John only surviving son of John and grandson of James Bazely.") The following books give accounts of his services to the country :— "Naval Chronicle," vol. xiv., p. 178, year 1805, with portrait ; Clowes' "Naval History," vol. iii., pp. 415 to 417, 454, vol. iv., pp. 8, 76, 193, 226 ; Marshall's "Naval History," vol. i., p. 139 ; "Universal Magazine," 1779, pp. 65, 229, 235 ; Sir T. Bram Martin's "Letters," vol. iii., pp. 291, 292 ; Huish's "Memoirs of the Duke of Clarence," vol. i., p. 290. In this last we find the names of Admiral Nelson, of Admiral Bazely, and of fourteen other Admirals, who took part in the Naval Procession 19 December, 1797, from the Admiralty to St. Paul's Cathedral. Admiral Bazely's letters to the Admiralty are preserved at the Record Office "In letters 1501 extending from 1771 to 1781." In the list of the Freemen of Dover the following entry is to be found, "John, son of John Bazely Esqre. By birth 6 Jan. 1763." The following magazines give his obituary notices :—"Naval Chronicle," 1809, vol. xxi., p. 352 ; "Gentleman's Magazine," 1809, vol. lxxix., p. 389 ; "Annual Register," 1809, p. 670 ; "Monthly Magazine," 1820, vol. l., p. 382.

John Bazely, 1767 to 1828. Admiral of the Blue. Son of Admiral John Bazely No. 1. Born at Dover, died at Dover. He was 3rd Lieutenant in the "Royal George" at the naval battle of 1 June, 1794 ; Post Commission, 11 November, 1794 ; Captain of the "Prince of Wales" in the action of L'Orient 23 June, 1795 ; Flag Captain of the Overyssel 1797, and was Captain of that ship at the capture of the Dutch fleet in the Texel in August 1797, in which vessel he continued till the Peace of Amiens, 27 March, 1802. He subsequently commanded the Sea Fencibles from the Mouth of the Humber to the River Ouse. Mention of his services are given in the following works :—Clowes' "Naval History," vol. iv., pp. 260, 274, 341, and 408 ; vol. vi., pp. 242, 243 ; Marshall's "Biography," vol. ii., p. 27 ; "Recollections of Captain J. A. Gardner," pp. 183 to 204. His letters to the Admiralty are to be found at the Record Office, in letters 1515, 1518. He was a Freeman of Dover, as may be seen by the following entry, "Lieutenant John (by birth), son of Captain John Bazely, 5 Sept. 1788." A schedule to a Dover Paving Act, 1810, speaks of house and grounds belonging to John Bazely, Esq.

Henry Bazely, 1768 to 1824. Captain R.N. Son of Admiral John Bazely No. 1. Born in Dover, died in Dover. Gained his seniority 8 April, 1800 (vide Steel's "Naval List," November 1814, p. 21). In the following works his services to his country are recorded :—Clowes' "Naval History," vol. iv., p. 341 ; James's "Naval History," vol. iii., p. 42 ; Sir T. Bryams Martin's "Letters," vol. iii., pp. 291, 292 ; Marshall's "Naval Biography," vol. ii., pp. 250, 253, vol. ii., p. 248.





This latter gives an interesting account of the naval engagement between His Majesty's sloops the "Fairy" and "Harpy" (Captain Henry Bazely) and the French frigate, "La Pallas." Pictures of this engagement were lent to the Naval Exhibition in 1891 by the Rev. T. T. Bazely, of Dover (vide Catalogue, p. 170). The letters written to the Admiralty by Captain Henry Bazely are to be found in the British Museum, manuscripts 34,908, 20,114. In the Record Office there is the log-book of H.M.S. "Harpy," kept up during the engagement on 6 February, 1800. Captain Henry Bazely was a Freeman of Dover. "Lieutenant Henry, by birth, son of Captain John Bazely, 13 Jan. 1792."

Genealogical Notes and Queries.

LECHE PEDIGREE.

["Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Fourth Series, Vol. II., p. 218.]

The Tideswell Brass distinctly says that Isabell, who married Sir Sampson Meverill, was the daughter of Sir Roger, not Sir Philip, Leche, Knt., as given in the chart pedigree at the above reference. This pedigree is qualified in the paragraph below; so this authority may help to prove the latter.

On the same brass is apparently a slip in the pedigree, as Margaret, who married Sampson Meverill, of Clifton, Esq., is stated to be the "daughter" of Philip Stapley; whereas the pedigree of Stapeleigh in Ormerod's "Cheshire," vol. iii., p. 497, says she was the daughter of Peter, and sister and coh. of Philip Stapeleigh, as well as Elizabeth, who married Ropp.

TWEMLOW PEDIGREE.

Sir,—I see that on p. 197 it is stated in the Twemlow Pedigree that Rev. G. B. Brown is great-grandson of Admiral Wm. Brown. This is incorrect. He is a grandson. Wm. Brown was a Rear-Admiral (see "D.N.B."), and was my great-grandfather.

Greenhill House, Weymouth,

Yours faithfully,
V. L. Oliver.

OLIVER ARMS.

This Grant of Arms is very valuable to me, as I have been doing Exeter Church Heraldry lately, in none of which are the Oliver coats like the grant; but surely a note should have been added in the text that the "ermines" tails had been either daubed out, rubbed out, or never put in, for the "margent does not more lively depict" it. Also I believe he was knighted 1670-1, and as the date of the grant is 1672, his achievement should have had a knight's not esquire's helmet.

Yours very truly,
F. Were.

Reviews.

Association for the Preservation of Memorials of the Dead, Ireland. Nos. 1 and 2, Part II. of Vol. VII. Journal for 1908. University Press, Dublin.

The Part II. of Vol. VII. forms a very compact volume of 354 pages, and being issued in paper covers is more handy for occasional reading. It begins its Report with the counties Antrim and Armagh, and the others are taken in their alphabetical order, and in county Cork we find in Kilcrea Abbey the oldest memorial, that to the founder, Cormac Mac Carthy, Lord of Muskerry, dated 1494; there are many other interesting memorials, but all of modern date. In co. Donegal, in the ruins of the Bishop's Palace at Raphoe, is an inscription to Bishop Leslie laying the foundation-stone in 1636, and in co. Down is an account of Donaghadee Church, which formed part of the possessions of the monks of Black Abbey, Newtownards. Antiquaries are agreed that St. Patrick landed at Templepatrick. The Church was rebuilt in 1626 by Viscount Montgomery, with the bell-tower walls over six feet in thickness; he died in 1636, and it is described by Harris in 1744 as an old building, and in 1881 it was much enlarged. The Countess of Mount Alexander by will, dated 1764, bequeathed £100 for repairs, and also £120, a sixth of which was to be paid to an Englishman of the Protestant religion, £30 for clothing thirty poor children, £10 for apprentices' fees, £50 to be divided between twenty-five poor housekeepers, and the remaining £10 to the officiating clergyman. The parochial school was flourishing in 1901, and is one of the best in Donaghadee. There is an excellent account of the parish given, likewise a number of inscriptions dated from 1711 to 1892. Christ Church Cathedral in Dublin, Lord Walter Fitzgerald informs us, was founded in 1038, and on a mural slab inscribed to Strongbow are the dates 1169 and 1177; there are two representations given of it, besides that of the tomb of his Lordship's predecessor, the 19th Earl of Kildare, and a mural monument to Francis Agard, a brass slab to John Lumbard, and the Sydney coat of arms, the Browne and Staples coat, Edward Goff's of 1607, and a fragment of a slab dated 1544.

The Part is amply illustrated throughout, down to co. Wicklow, and is well edited by Lord Walter Fitzgerald, finishing up with a number of funeral entries of the seventeenth century.

The International Genealogical Directory. Quarto. Walton-on-Thames: Charles A. Bernau.

THIS is the Second Edition, so we trust the Compiler and Editor is satisfied with his painstaking brochure; his Preface is much to the purpose, and should be read. The Directory of Names begins at No. 1 and goes up to No. 1381, some of the references being very ample, such as Jones and Woodruff of Connecticut and Chamberlayne of London. There is also a good index of Surnames given, which makes the Part very useful.

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record. Vol. XL., No. 2 for April 1909. New York: 226 West 58th Street.

THIS Part is embellished with a good portrait of Dr. Henry Reed Stiles, with an account of him by his friend Mr. Thomas A Wright, he having descended from a Connecticut farmer, a first settler in 1636, and his father being a bank-note engraver in New York in 1830. An article giving the names of Germans who came to England in 1709 is still continued, likewise the genealogy of the Knickerbocker family and that of the Hoppen-Hopper genealogy, and there is an account of the Bacon family given. Mr. W. Gilbert gives the readers a good digest of Essex Wills, especially referring to important names in the American Colonies, some of which going back as far as 1524 up to 1628. The Proceedings of the Society, with reviews, etc., close a very good Part.

Fenland Notes and Queries. Vol. VII., Part 81 for April 1909. Edited by the Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. Peterborough: George C. Caster, Market Place.

THIS Part is illustrated by a second view of Crowland Bridge, Lincolnshire, drawn in pencil in 1852, with a short account of it by the Editor. The Leverington Parish Accounts of 1529—1600 are continued, several items of which are for bread and wine for Communion service and Psalm books, as well as for killing vermin, such as weasels, pole-cats, mice, and hedgehogs. There is also an account of Ramsey Abbey from A.D. 972—1396, which refers to an account of Norwood of Wykeham in Spalding parish given in our Journal of December 1908, and a full notice of the Northamptonshire Yeomanry, with their names and subscriptions. The Part is generally interesting.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. Vol. XVII., No. 2, April 1909. Published by the Virginia Historical Society, Richmond, U.S.A.

THIS Part has a steel-plate portrait of Joseph Bryan, a leading Virginia gentleman and scholar; and the President of the Virginia Society gives a very interesting account of him, written at the special request of the Executive Committee. The Randolph Manuscript is continued from previous Parts, likewise the article on Virginia in 1650, and the Virginia Legislative Papers. The Revolutionary Army Orders under Washington in 1778-79 are still given, and the genealogy of the Brent and Brooke families, and the English descent of John Pleasants in 1645—1698 in Virginia are all good reading, and with "Notes and Queries" close a very general personal history of a large number of Virginia families, including the Spencers of Cople, Westmoreland.

FSA.

[The above Arms are recorded in Ulster Office as appertaining to the descendants of my great-great-grandfather William Fuller (p. 285). The Crest, a horse, is clearly shewn on the seal of a letter from George Fuller, Speaker to the Council of Cork (p. 282), dated 19 November 1754, now in my possession ; but the Canadian Branch, descended from Major Thomas Richard Fuller (p. 285), uses a martlet. Presumably this martlet was, at some time, rightly adopted as the mark of cadency of a fourth son, and was subsequently erroneously continued as a crest. It appears on an old tray in my possession. There is, at Mount Leader, a gold snuff-box (which I have not seen), presented by the Grand Jury of Cork to my great-grandfather Thomas Fuller, Treasurer of the County (p. 286), whose wife Ann was daughter of Mary Leader of Mount Leader.]

Pedigree of Fuller of Cork, Kerry, and (?) Halsted.*

.... Fuller.

- Richard Fuller of the parish of St. Finn Barre, City of Cork. Will proved 1642. Overseers, Rev. Thomas Bennett and the testator's wife Mary. Witnesses, Thomas Bennett, Benjamin Gribble, and Mary Fuller. = Mary ...., mentioned in her husband's will.
  - Elizabeth, mentioned as youngest daughter and as sole executrix in her father's will.
  - A child, mentioned in father's will as then, 1642, unborn.
- Thomas Fuller of Ingatestone, born at Halsted. Will proved 1 July 1635.
- Samuel Fuller of Halsted. Will proved 2 October 1635. Mentions his son John, "if he doth ever happen to come over again," which phrase would seem to point to Ireland, as it would hardly be used in reference to a foreign country. = Agnes. Will proved 14 June 1638.
  - John Fuller, 3rd son, was probably the same who held lands in Kerry by Knight's service from the Crown (Inquisition No. 59, Charles 1st, co. Kerry, calendered by Record Commissioners 1818). See FULLER of Glashnacree, co. Kerry, in Burke's "Landed Gentry." = Barbara. She was living in 1700 on 20 February when her jointure was secured in her son's mar. settlement.
    - Richard Atkins of Firville, co. Cork. See older editions of Burke's "Landed Gentry." He was living in 1702.
    - Maurice Fuller, joined his father in sale of lands to Teige Moriarty 1635. See Burke's "Landed Gentry," FULLER of Glashnacree.
  - Richard Purcell of Kilbrin. Will proved at Cloyne 7 June 1733. He was uncle of Ann Purcell, wife of Thomas Fuller. (See p. 286.) = Barbara, youngest da., living 28 June 1782.
    - John Fuller, mentioned in his father's will, born about 1632.
    - Richard Fuller, mentioned in his father's will.
    - Ezekiel Fuller, mentioned in his father's will.
    - Welshin, da., mentioned in her father's will.

One of the three, in all probability, was father of A

Ellinor, da. and coheir of Thomas Hodder of Ballea Castle (by his wife Ellinor Kingsmill), High Sheriff of Cork 1697; m. 1713 at St. Mary's, Shandon. See marriage bonds, Cork and Ross. One of the bondsmen was Robert Pellican. (See note on p. 283.)

= William Fuller of Donoughmore and Donoughbeg, leased from Laurence, Lord Barrymore, March 1696. See Equity Exchequer Bill, Fuller v. O'Hea, June 1748, William Austen acting as Attorney. See the Austin connection below. It is almost certain that this William Fuller was grandson of Richard who died 1642, but which son of Richard was William's father I have not been able to determine, as the Parish Records are lost from April 1665 to January 1708.

Elinor, married John Sealy, J.P., and had issue. See Burke's "Landed Gentry," SEALY of Richmount.

George Fuller, admitted to Freedom of Cork 1718; elected to Council 1727; Mayor of Cork 1734; Alderman for parishes of St. Finn Barre and St. Nicholas, Cork, 1736; Sheriff of Cork 1740 (and possibly the Sheriff of 1719). Will proved 1745, in which he names his wife Catherine and his sons William and George.

= Catherine, named in Chancery Bill 11 Feb. 1758 as wife of George Fuller and as one of the daughters of John Austin of Renendendle, co. Cork, by his 1st wife. (John Austin is also named therein as grandfather to William Fuller.) Married to George Fuller 1702 (Marriage Licences, Diocese of Cork and Ross).

Another da. of John Austin named in Chancery Bill 11 Feb. 1758 as intermarried with Joseph Austin (probably her cousin).

"Thomas Fuller of Fuller Park, Alderman, died 1741." (This note from an old newspaper. The property known as Fuller Park was also called Willow Hill, so I presume above Thomas to be of this branch, which owned that property.)

B

Emanuel Fuller, mentioned in Council Books of Cork as son of Alderman Fuller and brother of the Mayor of Cork for 1739. In list of Freemen 1789. (Note.—Letter signed by W^m^ Fuller "for my brother Eman: Fuller," dated 26 May 1748, in my possession.)

George Fuller, signs as George Fuller, junior, Committee Report 1736; Common Speaker to the Council of Cork; mentioned as G. F., junior, in 1769 (i.e., junior, not to his father, who was dead, but to another George Fuller); named in Equity Exchequer Bill 13 June 1749 as "Mercer of Cork," who succeeded Joseph Austin in the same business; died about 1769, at which date a pension is granted to the widow of George Fuller. See note to plate of Coat of Arms.

William Fuller, named in Chancery Bill 1758 as brother-in-law to Samuel Daunt and as grandson to John Austin of Renendendle, also in Equity Exchequer Bill 14 November 1761 as of Willow Hill, co. Cork, and as bound to Joseph Austin for debts incurred by his brother (not named), and again in Equity Exchequer Bill 17 June 1763 as executor with Emanuel Fuller and Elizabeth Daunt to Samuel Daunt. Will 25 Aug. 1778 as of Willow Hill, in which he mentions his nephews George and William Daunt, his brother Emanuel, and his nephew William Fuller.

= Mary, da. of Francis Daunt; marriage licence 1733, Diocese of Cork and Ross.

B

William Fuller, born about ? 1714; married about 1740; buried at St. Finn Barre, Cork, 21 Aug. 1768. Held 195 plantation acres in West Kerries for ever from Coln Denny by lease dated 25 Sep. 1733.

Jane, da. of William Harnett and sister to James Harnett; buried as "Jane, widow of William Fuller," 11 Sept. 1774 at St. Finn Barre, Cork. (Her mother was a sister of Rev. William Pellican,* Rector of Obrennan, co. Kerry, 14 February 1710.)

Marryat Memoranda.*

SIEUR THOMAS DE MARRIAT.

"Early in the XVI. century we find one Thomas de Marryat, as Scholar at Queen's College, Cambridge, has the honour of dancing in a masque before Queen Elizabeth when she visited the University in 1564; and later in 1569, when the Queen of Navarre pledged her jewels to Queen Elizabeth, she allowed Henry Champernon to raise a band of one hundred gentlemen for the Huguenot service. Thomas de Marryat joined this band and took service under Admiral Coligny; Sidney and Sir Walter Raleigh were among the number. They saved themselves during the Massacre of St. Bartholomew by taking refuge in Lord Whitworth's the English Ambassador's house. Thomas de Marryat was in high honour in the Huguenot army and fought in all the battles of Henri IV. In 1590 was the Battle of Ivry, on which occasion Henri IV. granted to all the officers, foreign and French, who fought that day under his banner, to bear on their arms a canton of pretence, a fleur-de-lis or on a field sable. This canton d'Ivry has been borne by the Marryats of East Bergholt since that period."—[Extracted from a MS. in the Swedish Registry at Stockholm.]

Latimer being the lawful incumbent, and sequestered and ejected therefrom; and since His Majesty's restoration Mr. Latimer has enjoyed the said rectory, and John Marriott hath lived with his wife and family in part of the parsonage house of Aston (Clinton), by permission of John Dunton, Clk., the rector; and the said John Marriott hath a share out of the said Rectory, and is an Inconformist, and hath lately removed himself to Watford, co. Herts, his wife and family still remaining in the parsonage house at Aston, because Aston Clinton where he lived is within three miles of Ailesbury, where by reason of the statute lately made he might not live."

[C. Gen. 3.] Roger de Busli III., the third son of William de Busli I. by his wife Hawisia, the eldest daughter of William Espec, and the sister by the same father and mother, and coheir of Walter Espec, was born in or about 1093 (p. 24), and so was 28 when he witnessed the foundation charter of Kirkham in 1121 ; 38 in 1131, when Rievaulx Abbey was founded ; and at the death of his father, in or about 1115, he would be about 22 years of age (p. 77).

We have also seen (p. 106) that William de Busli II. chose, under the Law "Esnecca," to take his mother's share, viz., the Espec estates, in consequence of which the 7½ knights' fees granted at the Conquest descended to the two brothers Jordanus and Roger III., who held them conjointly, and combined in paying their Relevium in 1155, after the death of Walter Espec, who was buried at Rievaulx on the 9th March 1153-4 (p. 156)—but Roger III. did not long survive.

In the Pipe Roll, 1155, rot. 5, m. 2, Jordanus de Buissei and Roger his brother pay in Yorkshire xxvj li. xiij s. et iiij d. for the preceding year, being their Relevium on succeeding to the 7½ knights' fees just surrendered to them by their elder brother. In 1156-7 in Yorkshire, "Jordano de Buisseio et Rog̃o fratri ejus x m̃. arg̃.," being their yearly tax, and then Roger III., having died during the year 19 December 1155 to 18 December 1156, disappears from the Pipe Rolls. The above dates are accurately certain, and it seems to me that the family arrangement and subinfeudation of the heirs of Roger III. must have been carried out very shortly after his death.

Roger III., who had an interesting history, was Accipitrarius to King Henry I. In MS. D. 25 at the Heralds' College, which is the original "booke of entrances made in the tyme of Visitation of Yorkeshyre begonne 1584 and continued 1585 by Rob^{t} Glover als Somerset, marschall and deputie to William fflower, Esq., als Norroy King of Arms," we find Glover stretching his hand back for 400 years in order to grasp the male blood of the great house of de Busli, whose history comprised nearly the whole of Nottinghamshire and a great part of the West Riding of Yorkshire from the time of Domesday Book; and in order to shew what variations had taken place in their surname from change of residence and from the owning or losing of manors, Glover has written perpendicularly up the mainstem, "This family was named London or de Londres, Gresbrok, and Tynneslowe," and at the top he begins with the two brothers Jordanus and Rogerus de Busli, thus shewing us the interest he had taken, and that he had satisfied himself from evidences of these five several "stages," we may call them, in their surname.

1584 it will be noticed is a good deal earlier than Gascoigne's and the other collections presently referred to, which one after the other repeat as the name of the father of Jordanus and Roger—"John de Busli"—which as our accurate annals shew is an error, here, I think, traced to its root! In this MS. D. 25 in Heralds' College the two brothers Jordanus and Rogerus, Accipitrarius to Henry I., are put down as the sons of one "John Dominus de Busli." Glover and the genealogists of his time had not access to the contemporaneous documents from which our accurate pedigree has now been impregnably proved. Dodsworth's Collections were not printed until 1655, and the Pipe Rolls and other records could only be seen after the payment of fees which were quite prohibitory.

Roger III. had married about 1113 the lady Eune, who after their marriage had become sole heiress to the exceptionally desirable lordship of Tinsley, held of the Honor of Tickhill. There was a park (a park is considered to stand for a large walled inclosure) and a lake and extensive woods. Mr. Joseph Hunter describes it as "this great parish." To understand our exact position I must give a short account of this Lordship of Tinsley. In Domesday Book, among the possessions of Roger de Busli I. it is accounted as three manors, which had been held in the time of Edward the Confessor by three Saxon Lords, Ulchell, Agemund, and Archil, whose lands had been given to Roger I. as recorded in 1086. Our Roger de Busli III., who we are now considering, was Accipitrarius, which we may translate Trainer of the Hawks to King Henry I., and the tenure of this estate, which he held jure uxoris and for her life only, was by the Serjeantcy of receiving a hawk at Michaelmas and training and keeping it through the winter, for which he was to receive from his chief lord 7½*d.* a day for the service of himself and his horse. There were but few manors which had a park and woods and every necessary convenience for such an honourable service; and he held it directly under the King, until the honour of Tickhill was bestowed as part of her dower upon the Queen Adeliza on her marriage on the 2nd of February 1121. As was always the case, the original tenures continued to all future tenants holding the lands, and we shall presently shew this to be yet in force more than 200 years afterwards.

After Queen Adeliza's marriage with William de Albini in 1138, he held these vast estates, the whole Honor of Tickhill jure uxoris, and only for her life. It is curious and interesting to see how this is recorded in the old pedigree then at Shenstone, as described in Sanders' "History" at p. 98. This book was compiled in 1769, but not published until 1794.

"Greisbrook, whence the family had their name, is a manor in Yorkshire, which in the reign of King Henry II. [19 December 1154 to 6 July 1189] was in the great house of Mowbray, of whom the Greisbrooks held their lands. Roger de Greisbrook, temp. Henry II., is mentioned as holding of the fee of Alice, Countess of Augie or Ewe, daughter of William de Albini, Earl of Arundel, by Queen Alice, relict of Henry I."

Now, if picked out in fragments, sorted in dates, and taken separately, these particulars, bit by bit, convey the exact facts; but worded as above they become entangled and wrong. Utter confusion is caused by supposing that de Albini, who married Queen Adeliza, was the same individual as he whose son, at the command of Henry I., took the name of Mowbray and had the estates of the Earl of Northumberland. The Honor of Tickhill and its vast possessions, including the 7½ knights' fees appertaining to the younger house of de Busli, were never in the great house of Mowbray! There is, perhaps, no genealogy of our earliest Baronial aristocracy which has been so inextricably confused as de Albini and de Mowbray; but during the last fifty years records have been searched and embodied and the exact descent arrived at.

The only way I can see of explaining these old errors of Sanders and others, and shewing the exact truth, is by compiling the following short pedigree, which covers the period we require, and I have annexed abstracts of three or four contemporaneous documents quite sufficient to prove the whole. All is now perfectly clear—we have only to know the exact dates and all fall into their proper places—while the few progressive charters appended tell us their own story; each grantee declares for us who was his father or grandfather. The man who took the name of Mowbray was nephew to William de Albini and Queen Adeliza his wife, by whom he left heirs to continue his line and succeed to any heritable property which they had!

Roger de Albini, or Moubray, under age at his father's death, and in ward to King Stephen, born say 1119, and 21 years of age 1140; a minor at the Battle of the Standard in August 1138; taken prisoner by Empress Maude at Lincoln 1141; went on Crusade with Lewis, King of France, 1148. In 1166 held eighty-eight knights' fees. Very large estates had been bestowed by Henry I. on Nigel, with remainder to this Roger, but exact particulars are not known (Yorkshire "Archæological and Topographical Journal," vol. iv., p. 386). In 1173 he adhered to the young Henry against his father Hen. II., when everything was confiscated, and in 1176 his castles of Tresk and Malesard were destroyed. A second time he went on Crusade, was taken prisoner, and is said to have died in Syria, leaving two sons.

The declaration in the register of St. Albans tells us that this same William confirmed all these on the day of his burial, by giving to the Priory a cross of silver, within which are built up the remains of the wood of the Lord's Cross and of His manger (presepio) and of the Holy Sepulchre of the Mother of the same our Lord Jesus Christ; also by his ring of gold; also by his cifum (scyphus, a great cup or bowl) of silver in the shape of a sphere, fabricated with wonderful art and fitly to be reserved for the Mass, all which he placed upon the altar by the hand of the above-named Bishop. These and very many others being witnesses, namely his sons William, Nigellus, and Oliverus, etc.

Roger.

The house of Moubray never held the Honor or lands of Tickhill! After the death of Adeliza, Queen Dowager, on 9 April 1151, all these estates returned to the Crown, and in the same year, 1151, King Stephen, in his political exigencies, gave them as a bribe to Randolf, Earl of Chester; but King Henry II., when he came to the throne in December 1154, resumed the Honor and Castle. For a very short time the Earl of Ewe was admitted to hold the lands, not the castle, but by what arrangement with Queen Adeliza and William de Albini her husband I cannot conceive, but he was dispossessed after the battle at Lincoln in 1141. From 1154 the whole Honor and estates, which of course gradually grew less, remained as a Royal appanage until 1214, when Alice, Countess of Ewe, appeared, followed by the lawsuit and final concord in 1122.

At the time of writing pp. 19, 107, I had not critically examined these later stages in the family history, and regret extremely having said on these pages that William de Albini, who married Adeliza the Queen, had afterwards taken the name of Moubray! and beg my readers will kindly erase it. The husband of Adeliza was William; the nobleman who took the name of Mowbray at the wish of King Henry I. bore the Christian name of Roger, and was nephew of William and his Queen-wife.

The earliest Heraldic Visitations of Yorkshire give us particulars of Family C. Flower, in 1584-5, starts his recorded pedigree, as already described, with Roger, Accipitrarius to Henry I., and the other great genealogists of Yorkshire have examined and certified and enlarged his account. Augustus Vincent, who died Windsor Herald 11 January 1625-6, leaving a great collection of most accurate researches, which Ralph Sheldon of Weston, co. Warwick, purchased to the extent of 240 MSS., all of them the works of Vincent, and left them by his will to the Heralds' College. Gascoigne, a most able and laborious historian, whose will was proved 1663-4; much of his work is now in the Bodleian Library. I give these particulars and dates to shew that these two great students upon whose foundations all later histories of the district have been built, were dead, or too old, before the year 1655, when the first volume of Dugdale's "Monasticon," being really the collections of Roger Dodsworth his collaborateur, was published, and therefore we need not be astonished at their saying over and over again that Roger de Busli III. [Family C.] was the son of one John! These earlier writers had not in their working years the "Monasticon" of 1655 to refer to or the contemporary records there first printed, by which we have proved that William de Busli I. married the sister and eldest coheir of Walter Espec, and by her had the three sons, William II. (A.), Jordanus (B), and Roger III., Accipitrarius (C.) (p. 106).

Now we have to dispose of Mr. Joseph Hunter, whose "South Yorkshire" was published 1828—1831, and who declares (vol. ii., p. 31) that he has followed Gascoigne in his pedigree of the Wentworth Family. Here is the satisfactory and sufficient reason for his perpetuating this John Busli error ! His great and splendid work was strictly confined to the Deanery of Doncaster, which includes nearly the whole of the West Riding, a very extensive and difficult subject !—but Kirkham Abbey stands in the East Riding ; and Rievaulx, another abbey founded by my ancestors, is in the North Riding, and their records, as we have seen, are quite clear and conclusive as to the parentage of William II., Jordan, and Roger III., but the focussing of Mr. Hunter's mind on his exact district, which has left to posterity so extremely valuable a book, prevented all excursions into other Ridings, where he would have found records of the twelfth century in correction of Glover and Flower in 1584, who first started the mistake.

On referring to my private Index to Mr. Hunter's great book, I find that he never even mentions either Kirkham or Rievaulx, nor does he even refer to the great name of Espec, so strictly was he obliged to adhere to his assigned limits, the Deanery of Doncaster, which he sought thus to perfect by close and concentrated study. Glover and Flower and the others could not help stumbling upon our John de Busli [B. Gen. 5] ; he was a much recorded man, but he lived full fifty years later than they placed him. We must remember that our four authorities, beginning with Glover and Flower in 1584, were each working out the history of the Wentworth family, which had in early times intermarried with a coheiress of de Tinsley, de London, de Gresbrok or de Busli, and they laboured to shew that connection and were eager to bring so illustrious a coat of arms within the Wentworth quarterings,—where it now stands quite correctly, as will be shewn presently, as the additional coat of Espec should also be !—our earliest known quartering, which fell in on the death s.p. of Walter Espec on 9 March 1154 (p. 81), who left three sisters, coheirs, but of Espec they knew nothing !

At p. 106 we have shewn that Roger de Busli III. was 28 years of age in 1121, but elsewhere I have mentioned that he may have been a year or two older, and we have now come to a point which may help us to settle the question. If 1093 is the exact date of his birth, then he would be 20 years old in 1113. He married in or about that year Eune de Tinsley, who some years afterwards inherited that large and very desirable manor ; but it is necessary here to give an exact statement of facts, and then we shall see what they prove.

Roger and Eune had one only child, a daughter Beatricia, born we may take it in or about 1114—a year or two in this case is of no account. This daughter married (1) Archil, of whom I know nothing more, and the marriage was never consummated. It was one of those child-marriages, almost universal among the greater nobility at that time and for 500 years afterwards ; children of six or seven years and younger were solemnly married, with the usual proviso that they were not to come together until the girl was 16 years of age.* These social arrangements were according to established customs, which were always closely adhered to, a few more particulars being added as the centuries floated on.

I have nothing to shew directly when Eune died, nor can I ever expect to find any record of so private a character as this marriage with Archil at so early a date. We know that she was dead before 1124-5, when Roger III. married his second wife, and Archil had died under age after a few years, and before 1130, when Beatricia would be 15 or 16 years of age. It is certain that Eune had inherited the Tinsley estate after her marriage, which took place in or about 1113, and that she died in or about 1124, also that Beatrix her daughter and the heiress to that estate had then been married as an infant to Archil since about 1120, when Beatrix would have been about six years of age ; and if, as is also certain, Archil her child-husband died in or before 1130, then Roger III. had become guardian and next heir to Beatrix !—a position which was not allowed by the Law—and hence the

* These child marriages are very curious and interesting. I have noted one which is unusually full of particulars ; it was dated 8 Dec. 1326 between Thomas Bardolf of Wormegay and Robert de Morlee, afterwards Marshal of Ireland. The deeds were exhibited to us on 10 May 1860, and exact copies will be found in the " Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries," Second Series, vol. i., p. 152, and will well repay the trouble of looking up in the printed volumes, arrangement with Roger de Maierolles or someone else became a necessity at Law, for, as we shall presently explain, the position of Roger III. after the death of Archil became legally impossible. And then Roger de Maierolles, having come to some friendly agreement with her father, appears thus in the Pipe Roll, 31 Henry I. (1130-31): "Rogerus de Maieroles reddit compotum de ii. m̃ argent pro terra Eune de Tineslei, cum filiam suam, In thesauro liberavit E.Q.E." That is, Roger de Maieroles paid his fine to the King for his licence, and obtained the estates which had been Eune's and the marriage of the daughter. The Roll of 31 Henry I. represents the monies received into the Treasury between 5 August 1129 and 4 August 1130.

I must again point out that lands acquired in frank marriage—that is, before marriage—created an entail for husband and wife for their two lives, and then for their heirs. Roger III. had not this life interest, and therefore Eune had succeeded to the estates of Tinsley after their marriage. Now this opens out a great deal for us! The ancient Lex Anglia, and the present Laws do so still, laid down that the gift of lands in frank marriage—that is, before marriage—created an entail upon husband and wife for their two lives and then for their offspring, but if estates accrued to the wife after marriage, then on her death they descended at once to the heir (Bracton, cap. xxx., sec. 8); and we see that Roger de Busli III. did not have them for his life. Again, the same ancient Laws forbad the next-of-kin, who would succeed in case of death, to act as guardian or feoffee; and in this case Eune, the mother of Beatrice, had died, and in the event of the death of Beatrice, her only heir, Roger III., as her father, would have come into full possession. Therefore the Law required the above arrangement.

Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, cap. 44, describes it in this quaint way: "The Law says To commit the care of a Minor to him who is next heir at Law is the same as delivering up a Lamb to the care of a wolf to be made a Prey of. But if the inheritance be held by knight service and is not soccage, then by the Laws of the Land the Minor and his Estate shall not be under the management of his relations of either side; but both shall be under the care and direction of the Lord of the Fee until complete age of 21."

Thus the Manor of Tinsley would have reverted to the King, the chief lord, and Roger de Busli III. had no choice. The cumbrous proceedings required by Law at that early date, step after step and with intervals between, would quite account for any lapse of several years before the final settlement.

I find in the Lincolnshire Survey, 1109—15 [Hearne's "Liber Niger," p. 404; Greenstreet's Facsimile, Plate IV., line 15; also Chester Waters' "Owners of Land in Lindsey," p. 22], that Roger Macherellus, as his name is Latinized, held lands in Burton in Lawress Wapentake, and was a neighbour of the De Buslis, and so this was a friendly arrangement between the two parents, and Roger de Busli III. was legally obliged to make it. To finish off about Roger de Maieroles, in the same Pipe Roll 1130-31 we find him pardoned by breve Regis vj s. and vj d. due for Danegeld. Furthermore, in Ralph Thoresby's "Diary," vol. ii., p. 85, he has noted that in 1711 he saw among the muniments at Wentworth, but was not allowed to copy, a charter from King Stephen (1135—1154) and bearing his seal, which granted to Roger de Maieroles this lordship of Tinsley.

Now King Stephen, who was needy and unscrupulous and always in distress, by this document created Roger de Maieroles himself the lord of Tinsley, whatever happened to his ward or her husband. In Mr. Joseph Hunter's Notes (Brit. Mus. Add. MS. 24,439, fo. 237) is this curious memorandum: "Tinsley was given by William I. to Roger de Buisley, but he surviving Henry I. (who died 1 December 1135), and adhering to Maud, Stephen seized on his estates and gave this Manor to Maieroles." [Quoted from "Magna Britannia," vol. vi., p. 517. This is of no authority whatever; it is a mere compilation from other books printed before 1731.] The two halves do not fit! Roger de Busli I., had he not died on 4th ides of January 1099, would be over 100 years of age when he adhered to Maud in 1135! We see at once that it was Roger de Busli III. (born in 1093) who survived, and whose estate is here said to have been confiscated by King Stephen; and if I could find any reliable record I should accept this explanation at once, as it reconciles everything and explains Stephen's Charter.

Beatricia de Tinsley and William de Maieroles, the son of Roger, were married, and in due time Roger, the father of William, died and the estate descended just as it would have done had no such unaccountable grant ever been made; and so some years afterwards we find in the Pipe Rolls for Yorkshire, 4 Henry II., p. 146 (1157-8), William de Maieroles in possession and pardoned per br. Regis xvs & xd. We must remember that such records are apparently lost from 1131 to 1155; if we had them to refer to we should find when William paid his relevium, that is when Roger de Maieroles died, and I would also remark that but for this unaccountable Charter from King Stephen no relevium would then have been due! At the end of this pedigree I propose to give on a separate page a copy of Glover's MS. Visitation in 1584-5, with some further particulars of Maieroles and other intermarriages, with a few record proofs, shewing how in course of time this Tinsley lordship eventually reverted to the direct de Busli male-blood in Family C.

We see at p. 309 that shortly after the death of Eune his first wife Roger de Busli III. married again before 1125. This date is fixed for us because Robert de Busli, his son by his second wife, witnesses the Foundation Charter of Roche Abbey in 1147, when we must take it for granted that he was 21. I have not found the lady's maiden name, but that is often the case at this early date, unless there should be some occasion for it to appear on the records, such as the payment for relevium on the wife's estates falling in years after; or, as is very usual, when the wife's property was more dignified than the husband's, in which case she frequently retained her maiden name in charters for the whole of her life.

At p. 77 I gave an account of William de Busli I. holding lands at Willoughton, co. Lincoln, in 1109, and that Anfridus de Canci held the other moiety of that manor. Now a generation has passed away and we have arrived at the reign of Stephen, 1135—54. In Dugdale's "Monast." (1673), vol. iii., p. 161, l. 28[a], we have the Charter of Anfridus de Chanci fit Willelmi de Chanci, with the assent of Walter and Roger, his sons and heirs, giving land in Scherpingbeck, co. Lincoln, to the Abbey of St. Peter's at York, and among the testibus occurs "Hamone præcentore," which Hamo was præcentor in 1155 (Dodsworth, lxiii.). This gives us an approximate date. In the Testa de Nevill, where dates are all guesswork, at folio 348[a]: Kelesby, co. Lincoln. "Et sciend' quod Simon de Canci pater prædicti Simonis dedit inde in maritagio xx solidos reddit' in Kelesby sorore sue" (Chester Waters' "Owners of Land in Lindsey," p. 26). So we see there were two generations named Simon. Now we come to Dugdale's "Monast." (1661), vol. ii., p. 535, l. 24[b], being Walter fitz Stephen's Calendar of the possessions of the Knights Templars, compiled in the year 1185 (at fo. 50 in the original MS.): "Co. Lincoln. De baillia de Lindeseia. Apud Wileketone sunt xi. bovatæ et v. tofta de dono Rogeri de Busli (III.) .... Tota ista terra predicta est de dono Simonis de Canci et de dono Rogeri de Buslei, sed villata nescit separare (the township knows not how to distinguish) feudum Simonis de Canci à feudo Rogeri de Buslei exceptis quinque toftis." In a later list of the same possessions drawn up in 1434 (Dugdale's "Monast.," vol. ii., p. 547, l. 62[b]), "Simon de Cancy et Rogerus Busse dederunt quamplurimas (very many) terras eidem." This gift of Willoughton is persistently said to have been made in the reign of Stephen (1135—1154). Roger de Busli III. was born in or about 1093, and died during the year between 19 December 1155 and 18 December 1156, when he was about 63 years of age.

Willoughton in Aslacoe Wapentake, where Roger de Busli III. held these lands, is only a mile or two from Burtun in Lawress Wapentake, where Roger de Maieroles held lands, as he did also in other places in Lincolnshire about this time ("Liber Niger," p. 404).

I think I may here conveniently explain the changes of surname which circumstances forced upon Roger de Busli III. He was born in or about 1093, son of William de Busli II. He married in or about 1113 Eune, who a few years after their marriage inherited this important manor and estate of Tinsley, when he became jure uxoris "de Tinsley," and was known under that surname. As explained on p. 309, by legal obligations following on her death in or about 1124, and the subsequent death of Archil some time before 1130, he had to yield up all control and interest in Tinsley, and then took up his residence at Gresbroke, one of the manors which he held in joint occupancy with his elder brother Jordan, and thus became Roger "de Gresbroke."

I have now seen sufficient evidences to shew that the portioning out of the 7½ knights' fees, held in joint occupancy by Jordan and Roger III., took place almost immediately after Roger's death in 1156—between that year and 1162, when the descendants of Roger, the younger brother, had been subinfeuded in certain of the estates under the chief lordship of Jordan and his descendants; also it is quite clear from their treatment that several of the smaller estates in Notts, Lincoln, and Rutland had been given in 1115 to these two brothers separately from the 7½ knights' fees; and thus we see Roger III. giving away Willoughton to the Knights Templars without taking any notice of his elder brother Jordan, who therefore had no rights therein.

There is a strong impression left, when going through all my records of him, that Roger de Busli III. had fallen into some disfavour at Court. I think he must have been involved in some of those rebellions and conspiracies so rife about the end of Henry I.'s reign (p. 21). Jordan certainly continued in high esteem under the ægis of his uncle Walter Espec, also his own splendid services at Werk and the Battle of the Standard assured to him the perfect confidence of reigning kings. On this account we cannot expect to find continual entries of Branch C in the Pipe Rolls after 1155-6, because apparently they had ceased to hold in capite after that date, except perhaps some of the smaller holdings in Nottinghamshire, etc.

It would appear that there remained to Family B after the division Maltby and Kymberworth, co. York, Essendine in Rutland, Bocland in Bucks, Eyeworth and Morton in Beds, Staveley in co. Derby; and that, as the elder branch, they continued chief lords over all the other subinfeuded manors.

Roger de Busli III., having settled his residence at Gresbrok and so taken that name, died before 18 December 1156, leaving his eldest son Robert. I have no doubt there were other sons whose names have passed before me, but not being able to give satisfactory proof that they were "sons," I have left them alone and adhered to the direct male line—my only interest!

Acworth Pedigree.

["Miscellanea Genealogica et Heraldica," Fourth Series, Vol. I., p. 62.]

The name of William Acworth's (buried at Gillingham 20 December 1711) wife was, I find, Devert. The will of her brother Daniel Devert, Commissioner for Navy, who died at Hackney 6 September 1765, aged 80, is dated 23 May 1754. He describes himself therein as Clerk of the Acts of His Majesty's Navy. He mentions his nephews Jacob Ackworth Pownoll and Philemon Pownoll, junior; nephew Joshua Thomas; sister Mrs. Elizabeth Richards; the two sons and three daughters of Mr. Philemon Pownoll by my late niece; niece Mrs. Elizabeth Greenway; Mr. John Greenway, Storekeeper of Portsmouth. A son of Jacob Ackworth Pownoll was named Philemon Devert and baptized at Stoke Damerel 17 March 1757. The parentage of Mary Stephens, the latter's mother, I am still unable to ascertain. Her brother William Stephens, Surgeon in the Navy, must have died between 1780—95, but am unable to find his will.

Jane and Elizabeth, both living under twenty-two 6 December 1634.

The Steward Arms impaled on Edward Death's monument vary only slightly from those granted 10 March 1586 to the Steward family of Cambridgeshire, Norfolk, etc., to which the mother of Oliver Cromwell belonged.

There were twenty children of Edward Death's second marriage, of whom the following were probably two: Cromwell Death of Furnival's Inn, living 1 December 1668; "Mrs. Mary Deth," buried at St. Martin's, Stamford, 6 September 1721.

Various advertisements relating to "The Black Fryers," the residence of the Death family, appeared in the "Stamford Mercury," e.g., 19 November 1724: "The ancient seat called the Fryers, which is a very good house in very good repair, scituate in a very good air and pleasant gardens, with coach-house, stables, and granaries .... to be lett," etc.

NOTES.

The two families of Schaw and Rutherfurd have intermarried for several generations. They were near neighbours on the border. It is believed there were more marriages of Rutherfurds and Scotts besides the marriage of Sir Walter's father and mother.

When Sir Walter Scott was in Dublin, and visited Major Sirr to see his pictures, he noticed a small Irish harp in the drawing-room and asked to hear it played. "An Irish air on an Irish harp," he said. So Major Sirr's daughter Catherine, a girl at the time, played one for him, and then a Scotch air.

When General Schaw was asked to advise on the defence and military organization of New Zealand on his arrival in the Colony he visited the four fortified ports—Wellington, Auckland, Dunedin (Otago Harbour), and Christchurch (Port Lyttelton)—and declined to accept any remuneration after sending in his report. The Governor of New Zealand, Sir William Jervois, in his speech to Parliament in 1888, stated: "The thanks of the country are due to Major-General Schaw for the very valuable assistance and advice which have been given by him in connection with the completion of harbour defence works, and the reorganization of the forces of the Colony. His experience, the benefit of which was freely given to my Government, has proved of great advantage." At the invitation of the Government of New South Wales to advise them in a similar manner, he visited the defences of that Colony at Sydney, and Botany Bay, Newcastle, and Wollongang, and presented his report at the end of 1887.

This is solely of interest because Henry Grice went beyond seas, leaving his property, a water mill held on lease from the Dean and Chapter of Durham, in charge of his sister. Reviews.

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Record. Vol. XL., No. 3, for July 1909. New York: 226 West 58th Street.

The present Part is nicely illustrated by two steel-plate portraits, one of Mr. John Hansen Rhoades the banker of New York, being connected with some notable Dutch families, and maternally with the Dyckmans and Hoppers. The second portrait is that of Mr. Jasper Hopper, who began his career in the office of the Secretary of State in 1791 at Albany, and was instrumental in establishing the first newspaper of the country, "The Lynx." The Hoppe-Hoppen-Hopper Lineage is further continued from him. Mr. Rhoades is a younger man, and his portrait is more like that of an English gentleman, both in features and dress; he died in 1906. The Part contains the Digest of Essex Wills, continued from former Parts; Clues from English archives respecting American genealogy; account of the Dutcher family, etc.

Notes to the Visitation of England and Wales. Edited by FREDERICK ARTHUR CRISP. 1909. London: "Grove Park Press," S.E.

WE welcome the eighth volume of these extremely interesting genealogical additions to the older generations of many families included in the "Visitation of England and Wales." The pedigrees in the volume under review are in many cases published for the first time, and have all been submitted to careful revision and verification, and are illustrated with portraits, autographs, and seals. The volume contains notes on the following families: Adams, Allgood, Allix, Armitage, Babington (two pedigrees), Bury (two pedigrees), Cave (two pedigrees), Collyer, Colman, Coke, Cotton, Cremer, Danvers, Drake, Dudderidge, Fellowes, Gerard, Gibbons, Gresler (two pedigrees), Hatchett, Haworth, Heberden, Middlemore (two pedigrees), Moore, Morris, Pack, Phipps, Rawson, Spooner (two pedigrees), Strickland, Wheler (four pedigrees), Woodd. It also contains copies of deeds, monumental inscriptions, and wills relating to some of the families. The following should, however, be noted: on page 170 the baptism of Susanna Martha Woodd, the wife of Robert Middleton, took place at Croydon Church on 27 September 1776, and the baptism of her brother, the Rev. Thomas Woodd, took place there on 8 February, and not 18 March 1778. There are only 150 copies privately printed. A General Prospectus of the above works will be sent on application to the Editor at the "Grove Park Press" above-named. A complete set of these volumes should be in the library of every genealogist. They are superbly printed on hand-made paper of imperial 8vo size and bound in half-parchment. The subscription price is one guinea per volume.

The Parish Register Society of Dublin. Vol. V.—St. Catherine, Dublin, 1636—1715; edited by HERBERT WOOD, Esq., B.A. (Oxon), M.R.I.A. Vol. VI.—The Union of Monkstown, Dublin, 1669—1786; edited by HENRY SEYMOUR GUINNESS, Esq. Dublin: 1908.

THE above two volumes were issued to Members in 1908, and Vol. V. is a substantial one of upwards of 300 pp., with a Preface giving full account of the size of the original parchment, and mentioning how the entries in 1709—1714 shew a lamentable want of knowledge of orthography and calligraphy, such as Burings for Buryings, etc., and it gives examples of curious names and descriptions of persons, such as Joe ye Foole. The volume is edited with great care, and is furnished with an excellent Index of upwards of 50 pp. in small type.

Vol. VI. was presented to the Society by Henry Seymour Guinness, Esq., the Hon. Treasurer of the Society, and edited by him, furnished with an interesting Preface and a good Index. The Registers of Dublin are of great importance, as they give the history of many branches of English families and the origin of American and Colonial settlers; besides, early in 1700, numerous cadets of old English houses came to Ireland and resided in Dublin. The work of the Editor has been done in a painstaking manner, and is worthy of all commendation.

Fenland Notes and Queries. Vol. VII., Part 82, July 1909. Edited by the Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. Peterborough: George C. Caster, Market Place.

THE Seal of Abbot Godfrey begins the present Part, which is illustrated by a plate shewing the seal in 1304, which is found in the Cottonian Charters in the British Museum. A Paper on the Church inscriptions in the Hundred of Elloe gives several dating from 1718 and upwards, and in an article on Peterborough Cathedral Registers there are accounts of baptisms, marriages, and burials, dating from 1625, etc. Altogether the Part is a good one.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. Vol. XVII., No. 3, for July 1909. Published by the Virginia Historical Society, Richmond, U.S.A.

THIS Part has a lengthened article on the Randolph Manuscript, continued from former Parts, consisting of petitions, orders for planting mulberry trees, and for silk given to the King; there are also orders for the allowance for wolves killed, etc. The Part is interesting for the Virginia Legislative Papers, also Miscellaneous Colonial Documents, and for the genealogy of the Brent, Morton, Gregory, and Robinson Families.

Register of Freemen of the City of London

IN THE REIGNS OF HENRY VIII. AND EDWARD VI.

Translated and Edited, with an Introduction and Index,

By CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A.,

Honorary Secretary of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society, etc.

The MS. from which this Register was collected was burnt in a fire which occurred in the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall in February 1786, it being lost with a matchless series of documents illustrating the condition and progress of trade within the City. The volume represents all that is known to exist of the Registers of Freemen. The principal document is the Egerton MS. 2408 in the British Museum, purchased by the Trustees in 1877. The MS. consisted only of thirty leaves, the margins being burnt on all sides, and holes through some of the leaves. The second MS. was bought at public auction in 1896 by the Guildhall Library, having been previously purchased by the Rev. Henry Cross in 1849 at an old curiosity shop.

The Work has been very carefully edited by Mr. Charles Welch, and in giving an Admission by Apprenticeship in Latin he appends to it a translation. Where a cook wanted to purchase he had to pay £20, but admission by apprenticeship was 14*s.* 10*d.*, whereas those by patrimony ranged from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 15*s.* 4*d.* The total sum is given on each page, and where the names are not decipherable blank dots are inserted. Every care has been taken to ensure accuracy, and the Editor is to be congratulated on rescuing such an important document from oblivion.

Register of Freemen of the City of London

IN THE REIGNS OF HENRY VIII. AND EDWARD VI.

Translated and Edited, with an Introduction and Index,

By CHARLES WELCH, F.S.A.,

Honorary Secretary of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society, etc.

The MS. from which this Register was collected was burnt in a fire which occurred in the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall in February 1786, it being lost with a matchless series of documents illustrating the condition and progress of trade within the City. The volume represents all that is known to exist of the Registers of Freemen. The principal document is the Egerton MS. 2408 in the British Museum, purchased by the Trustees in 1877. The MS. consisted only of thirty leaves, the margins being burnt on all sides, and holes through some of the leaves. The second MS. was bought at public auction in 1896 by the Guildhall Library, having been previously purchased by the Rev. Henry Cross in 1849 at an old curiosity shop.

The Work has been very carefully edited by Mr. Charles Welch, and in giving an Admission by Apprenticeship in Latin he appends to it a translation. Where a cook wanted to purchase he had to pay £20, but admission by apprenticeship was 14*s.* 10*d.*, whereas those by patrimony ranged from 1*s.* 6*d.* to 15*s.* 4*d.* The total sum is given on each page, and where the names are not decipherable blank dots are inserted. Every care has been taken to ensure accuracy, and the Editor is to be congratulated on rescuing such an important document from oblivion.

Demy octavo, reduced price 5s. bound in brown cloth.

SCHAW OF EDINBURGH AND NORTH CAROLINA.

I have a MS. Tour, written in 1778 by Miss Jen. Schaw of St. Andrew Square [? Edinburgh] (2 vols. quarto), and from it I give the following information :—

'Miss Schaw sailed from Leith in the Jamaica Packet on 25 Oct. 1774, and there were also on board Jack, Billy and Fanny Rutherford, going out to their father in North Carolina, of whom Billy was scarcely 10 years of age, and his sister some years older. They arrived at Antigua on 12 Dec., and after paying visits there and at S^{t} Kitts, landed at Brunswick in Carolina, reaching 'Shawfield,' the estate of her brother Robert Schaw, about March 1775. Her brother Alexander was also settled there. Her brother Robert's wife was an 'American,' sister of Robert How who was later a General (of the Rebels).

'The plantation of Shawfield was on the N.W. branch of the River Cape Fear, above the Town of Wilmington. An old widow lady, a friend of M^{r} Rutherford's late parents, died 1775, and left her estate called 'Mount Pleasant' (4 miles from the Great Road) to young Fanny Rutherford. M^{r} Rutherford her father was Receiver-General of the Province and a Member of the Assembly, and his plantation called 'Hunthill' was 30 miles from Point Pleasant and near the river, with large saw mills. Here he made casks, etc., for the West India trade, which brought him a return of £1200 to £1500 st. per annum.

'Alex^{r} Schaw escaped to England with despatches from Governor Martin in Capt. Tallmash's frigate. He had some effects at S^{t} Kitts, to which place he begged his sister to retire on account of the hostile action of the rebels. She accordingly left on Nov. 5, 1775, with the three Rutherford children and returned to Scotland.'

The Schaws and Rutherfords were all Loyalists. Sabine mentions only two Shaws of N. Carolina, Colin and John, who were both of course robbed of their property for not fighting against their King. He gives notices of three Rutherfords, viz., James, whose property was confiscated in 1777 ; John, a Member of Council in 1775, and Thomas (mentioned above in Miss Schaw's book), a Member of Assembly for co. Cumberland and a Colonel, who acted for a time with the Whigs, but in 1776 definitely sided with the Loyalists, and was deprived of his command and in 1779 of his estate.

SCHAW OF JAMAICA.

There was also a family in this Island, where they owned a plantation called "Schawfield," but it is not known if and how they were connected with the other Schaws. I give the following names and the dates of their death : James Atkins Schaw 1769, Samuel Lyddall Schaw 1778, Charles Schaw of Schawfield 1796, wife of Dr. James Schaw 1797, Wm. Schaw 1801.

Pedigree of Goddard of Cork, Ireland.

This Pedigree has been compiled mainly from information contained in some notes of wills, etc., given me some years ago by Mr. J. F. Fuller, F.S.A., of Dublin. To this I have from time to time added from other sources. It would be interesting to know who these Goddards were, using as they do the arms of Goddard of Wilts. I should be glad of any information which would throw light on this point, or would amplify this Pedigree.

In Walter Wilson's "Dissenting Churches in London, Westminster, and Southwark," occurs the life of Zephaniah Marryat. He was minister of the congregation worshipping at Union Street, Southwark, 1710—1754. This congregation originally met at Gravel Lane, afterwards at Deadman's Place, then at Union Street. In 1720 he published "The Exalted Saviour, or Jesus Christ the Lord and God of True Believers." He was also Divinity Tutor at the academy supported by the King's Head Society at Plasterers' Hall. He was one of the Merchants' Lecturers at Pinner's Hall. He catechised the children in a large charity school in Gravel

JOSEPH MARRYAT, Senior, M.P.

Born at Southwold and trained as a merchant in London, he went out at an early age to Grenada. In 1788 visited the United States, met the family of Frederick von Geyer, whose third daughter he married. He returned to England after the birth of his eldest son in the year 1789, which he did not again leave except for a visit to France with his wife and family after the peace of 1814. He became M.P., Chairman of the Committee at Lloyds, head of the banking house of Marryat, Kaye, Price, and Co., and Colonial Agent for the islands of Grenada and Trinidad. He spoke in the House with authority on colonial and commercial questions. A list of his writings fills about one and a half columns of the British Museum Catalogue. He died suddenly whilst writing a frank at his Banking House in Mansion House Street. The previous day, Sunday, after attending service at Wimbledon Parish Church, he was engaged writing the epitaph on his servant, killed the previous day, and buried near his master's tomb. A headstone is erected to the memory of James Arbrey.

Here lie | the remains of | James Arbrey, | who died the 10th of January 1824 | Aged 72 Years.

He had lived nearly twenty two years in the | service of Joseph Marryat, Esq^{r}, of this village, | as Bailiff, highly and deservedly respected | for the integrity and piety of his character | when he was thrown out of a cart by the | horse falling and killed on the spot.

In the midst of life we are in death.

Reader, live THOU before the all seeing Eye,
Like him who rests beneath this humble sod;
So shalt thou be like him prepared to die,
Whenever called upon to meet thy God.

On the back of the same headstone is:—

In | the same Grave | lie the remains of | WILLIAM CLEMONS, | who was 25 years in | M^{rs} Marryat's Service | as Coachman, died July 6th, 1853, | Aged 49 | "Submit yourselves to God." | Also SARAH, | wife of the above: | who died 29th April 1875, | Aged 71 years. | Also EMMA | their daughter | who died at 14 Rue Godot | de Mauray, Paris, 28th March 1859 | Aged 29 years | and was buried in the Cemetery | at Mountmartre. | "In thee have I Put my trust."

His tomb is lying on the north side of the church in Wimbledon Churchyard. Though no name is thereon it may easily be recognised by the "arms," which appear on the side, and the "crest" on the end.

Barry of six or and sable, on a canton of the second a fleur-de-lis of the first, MARRYAT; impaling Gules, a vulture with outstretched wings argent, GEYER. Crest: On a coronet a ram's head, horned.

When the tomb was opened for the burial of Miss Ellen Marryat, there were seen seven coffins therein. By the courtesy of Miss Fox-Young the following information from the coffin-plates is supplied:—

1. Joseph Marryat, Esq^{re}, M.P., died 12 January 1824, in his 57th year.
2. Samuel Marryat, jun., ob. 21 February 1825, aged 25. [Son of last.]
3. Samuel Marryat, Esq^{re}, one of His Majesty's Council, a Bencher of the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, died 15 November 1828, aged 66. [Brother of first.]
4. Ann, widow of Samuel Marryat, Esq^{re}, ob. 20 November 1839, aged 80 years. [Widow of last.]
5. Charlotte, widow of Joseph Marryat, Esq^{re}, ob. 3 December 1854, aged 81 years. [Widow of first.]

7. Mary, widow of Joseph Marryat, born 24 October 1794, died 29 October 1882. [Widow of last.]
8. Ellen Marryat, died 26 February 1905, aged 91 years. [Youngest daughter of the first.]

From the Registers of Births and Baptisms formerly at Dr. Williams' Library, Red Cross Street, Cripplegate, London, are abstracted the following relating to the children of Joseph Marryat and Charlotte his wife (formerly Geyer):—

1792, July 10. Frederick (see under Captain Frederick Marryat, R.N.).
1793, Sep. 5. Charlotte, born at Catherine Court, London.
1794, Dec. 3. Maria, born at Catherine Court, London.
1796, July 6. Henry, 3^{d} son, born at Catherine Court, London.
1800, Feb. 6. Samuel, born at New Bridge Street, Blackfriars.

He wrote several pamphlets on Political, Financial, and Colonial questions.

CHARLOTTE MARRYAT.

Her father Frederick W. von Geyer took sides with the Crown during the War of American Independence. He left Boston at the same time as the town was evacuated by the British troops, and his property was confiscated. However, both his citizenship and property were restored to him about 1790. His daughter Charlotte often mentioned that when a little child she was passed out of the rear windows of her father's mansion in Summer Street when the liberty boys threatened the front of the house. Her sister Nancy was married to Rufus G. Amory, and the wedding was graced by the presence of Prince Edward, better known as the Duke of Kent, who was father of Queen Victoria.

Her father's shield is an instance of allusive or canting arms, being taken from his surname GEYER=geier, i.e., a vulture, and they appear on her husband's tomb in Wimbledon Churchyard, also on her bookplate.

After the death of her husband Joseph Marryat, M.P., in 1824, Charlotte, his widow, continued to live in his house and took a great deal of pride in the gardens. She entertained largely, and most of the well known men of the time visited her. She was a F.H.S., and several times had medals awarded her for exhibits. Her name appears on the benefaction board in Wimbledon Church, to which she presented the Queen's arms and the sun-dial.

1854. On Wednesday the 13th inst., at Wimbledon House, Surrey, in her 82nd year, Charlotte, the widow of the late Joseph Marryat, Esqre, M.P.

("The Times," Dec. 14, 1854.)

JOSEPH MARRYAT, JUNIOR, M.P.

He succeeded his father as M.P. for Sandwich, and continued as such till 1835. He was also a member of Committee at Lloyds and a partner in his father's bank. He was well known as a great collector of porcelain, and in 1850 issued his book on Pottery and Porcelain, which went through three editions. In 1866 the second edition was translated into French. He died in Warwick Street, Eccleston Square, London.

CAPTAIN FREDERICK MARRYAT.

In 1889 a correspondence appeared in "Notes and Queries" (Seventh Series, vol. vii.) as to where Captain Marryat was born. On p. 294 Rev. J. Maskell answers his own query by writing, "I have learned on the highest family authority that Capt. Marryat was born in Great George Street, Westminster, July 10, 1792."

In the Public Record Office, amongst the Admiralty Records, are "the Navy Board passing Certificates." On examining I could not find Marryat's certificate of birth, but I found some correspondence, here copied.

"ROYAL WILLIAM," AT SPITHEAD,

[In another hand.] Rd 25 Oct.

GENTLEMEN,

In reply to your letter of the 22d Instant relative to the Baptisment Certificate of Mr Frederick Marryat, I enclose for your information a Letter addressed to me by the Passing Captains stating their opinion of the sufficiency of the document produced, which I herewith return.

I am,
Gentlemen,
Your most obedient humble Servant,
(Signed) R. BICKERTON.

The Principal Officers and Commissioners of His Majesty's Navy, London.

His Majesty's Ship "Gladiator," Portsmouth Harbour,
October 24th, 1812.

Sir,

In reply to yours of the 22d of October enclosing an answer from the Navy Board to ~~some~~ doubts which had arisen in our minds relative to a Certificate of Age for Mr Fredk. Marryat, we beg leave to say that we are perfectly satisfied with the Affidavit, and have signed the passing Certificate of the above named Midshipman.

We have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient Servants,
J. D. Springer, "Barham."
B. W. Page, "Puissant."
E. Berry, "Barfleur."

To Sir Richard Bickerton, Bart.,
Admiral of the Blue,
Commander-in-Chief,
etc., etc.

Samuel Marryat of Russell Square in the County of Middlesex, and also of the Middle Temple, London, Barrister at Law, maketh Oath and saith, that Frederick Marryat, Midshipman in the Naval Service of this Country, and who he believes has actually served for the space of six years on board L'Imperieuse, the Victory, Africa, Spartan, Indian, and other Ships in His Majesty's service, is more than twenty years of age. And this deponent saith he is the uncle of the said Joseph [sic] Marryat and well remembers that he was born in the Summer of the Year one thousand seven hundred and ninety two; and this deponent was present at his baptismal Ceremony, which was performed by John Williams, Doctor of Laws, then a dissenting clergyman, resident and officiating as such, at Sydenham in the Parish of Lewisham in the County of Kent, where the Deponent's Mother (the Grandmother of the said Frederick Marryat) kept house and resided at that time. And this Deponent further saith he has always understood and believed it was and is a general practice with dissenting Ministers (in and near London interpolated) to register and enter the Baptisms and Burials performed by them respectively in Register Books kept for that purpose at an extensive Public Library, established long ago, and principally for the use of dissenting ministers, by a former Doctor Williams and called Dr Williams' Library, in Red Cross Street, Cripplegate, and of which the first named Dr Williams* was once the Librarian, but which office (being tenable only by a single man) he had vacated by marrying, and this Deponent also saith that he has this day been to the said Library in Red Cross Street aforesaid and has there seen a series of such Register Books, each of them containing some (such erased) thousand entries of Births, apparently entered by the Registrar in chronological order of the returns thereof by the different Ministers to such

* John Williams (1727—1798), son of a tanner, born at Lampeter 25 March 1726-7; educated at Lampeter and Carmarthen; Tutor at Birmingham. In 1752 minister at Stamford, Lincs.; 1755 minister at Wokingham, Berks. In 1767 removed to Sydenham as minister, remaining to 1795, when he resigned and lived at Islington. Died 15 April 1798 in Canonbury Row, Islington. He was LL.D. and author of many books.—"D.N.B."

Registrar, and this Deponent found in one of the said (Books interpolated), marked "Register of Births C.," the following entry, which he believes to be genuine :—

No.	Names of Children.	Names of Parents.	Witnesses.	Time of Birth.
				Day.	Month.	Year.
75	Frederick Marryat, Parish of Allhallows Barking, City of London. Registd Nov. 14, 1792. W. L. Towers.	Joseph Marryat and Charlotte, Daughter of Fredk William Geyer.	Susan Lamb. S. Mackeness.	10	July	1792 *

And lastly this Deponent saith that the said Frederick Marryat, this Deponent's nephew, is the son of Joseph and Charlotte Marryat, who in the year 1792 lived in Catherine Court, Tower Hill, which is in the Parish of Allhallows Barking in the City of London, and who never had any other son of the name of Frederick, and that the said Joseph and Charlotte Marryat are both now at or in the Neighbourhood of Sandwich in the Isle of Thanet, for which place the said Joseph Marryat has just been elected Member of Parliament.

Sworn this 15th day of October 1812 in the City of London before me,

Jackson and Law Families.

I shall be glad of any information as to what became of the business of a James Jackson, Attorney, of 17 Furnival's Inn, London. He acted for the Sherard and Molyneux families. By his will, dated the 2nd of January 1776, he left a legacy to his nephew Thomas Peircy of Little Chelsea, Middlesex, and Robert Law of Furnival's Inn, both of whom he appointed his executors, and he directed that the residue of his personal estate should be divided equally between Robert Holliday (his nephew) of Enfield, Middlesex, Mary Chapman, widow (his niece), and sister of the said Robert Holliday, James Peircy the elder (his nephew) of Old Fish Street, London, Sugar Baker, the said Thomas Peircy, John Margerum Close, clerk, and Henry Jackson Close, clerk (the sons of his late nephew, the Reverend Henry Close, deceased). The will was proved on the 10th of April 1777 in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. Robert Law appears to have been an Attorney, and to have carried on James Jackson's business. On the 29th of May 1784 administration of the goods and chattels of the said Robert Law was granted to his father Thomas Law. I should also be obliged for any information that would enable me to trace the present representatives of this Thomas Law.

Descent in the Male Line of the Family of Grazebrook from 1065, with Proofs for each Generation.*

[C. Gen. 4.] Robert, son of Roger III., by the second marriage about 1124, was born about 1125-6, and so would be about 30 at his father's death in 1156.

The first time where I have found this Robert mentioned is in Dugdale's "Mon.," 1655, vol. i., p. 835, l. 44[b], when his first-cousin Richard de Busli (Gen. 4 of Family B) founded Roche Abbey in 1147 (p. 198), to which charter he appears as a witness under the name of Roberto de Scalzebi. We know, therefore, that he was then of full age, that is, born before 1126, and at that time resided on the estate of Scowsby, one of the manors recorded as held since Domesday, and now in the joint occupation of Jordan and Roger, father of Robert, who was now generally called "de Gresbroc," as explained.

I will presently tell the story of Scawsby, and shew how constantly surnames were altered and acquired with the residence during this twelfth century, but must now continue the records of Roche. Robert, son of Roger, had also given lands towards that endowment, for by a second charter Richard de Bulli confirms the gifts to that Abbey (Dugd. "Monast.," vol. i., p. 836, l. 37[a]), Ailricthorpe and the land of William de Alz which my father gave them "et terram quam habent de Roberto militi meo de Scalzebi," and his knight then follows as a witness, "Robertus de Bulli." I think the unusual description "my Knight of Scalcebi" implies interest and approval, and that Richard (Family B), whose own children were yet quite young, felt a certain pride in his cousin. We shall see his after-career, but it seems to me that Richard was a discerner of character, and foresaw it in 1162, which must be the date of this parchment, viz., just after the death of Richard's father, which had occurred early in that year. Mr. Hunter ("South Yorkshire," vol. i., p. 269) notes that Robert held Scawsby, which was an original part of what the de Buslis held of the Honour of Tickhill.

I think perhaps I had better pause here and shew the history of Scawsby. We have here in 1147, and again in 1162, Robert de Bulli residing, and sometimes known by the distinctive adjunct of Scawsby. This was one of the Domesday manors of Roger de Busli I.: two carucates in demesne; eight villains and six bordarii who held three carucates, making in all five carucates, partly held by Alsi under Roger; apparently Alsi was regularly subinfeuded and was perhaps the grandfather of William de Alz mentioned above. It was a hamlet in the parish of Brodsworth, and was held as overlord by Robert, son of Roger de Busli III., about 1162-3, which younger branch of the de Buslis afterwards subinfeuded another person, who, after a few years residence there, acquired and continued the name of de Scawsby ("South Yorks.," vol. i., p. 261). Above, in 1162, we see Robert, son of Roger de Busli III., described as of Skowsby, and Pope Urban III., on 7 April 1186, when confirming the list of endowments which had been bestowed down to that date upon Roche Abbey (Dugd. "Monast.," vol. i., p. 839, l. 3[b]), repeats the same. Mr. Joseph Hunter dates the subinfeudation by the de Buslis as about 1170.

The division of the original 7½ knights' fees, held jointly by Jordan (Family B) and Roger III. (Family C) took place, as confirmed by my own researches, between 1156 and 1162 (p. 312), about which date Robert, son of Roger, having taken up his residence at Gresbrok, where his father had died in 1156, began to subinfeud portions in Scawsby; and so we find Hugh, who was the tenant of a considerable holding in that manor, witnessing, as "Hugone Scauceby," John de Busli's confirmation of his father's gifts to Roche Abbey immediately after his father's death in 1179-80 (p. 202). While, on the same reference page, when John de Builli, a year or two after 1181 (Bodleian, Yorkshire Deeds, No. 75), gives to Pontefract half an acre in Kimberworth, this same Hugh, being the most important sub-tenant at Scawsby, and probably occupying the now deserted manor house, appears as first witness, and with the full-fledged title of hug⁹ "de" Scaucebi.

This seems a good opportunity of shewing in a general way—how I was going to write "universally"—at this time, from about the middle of the twelfth century, surnames with the "de" sprang up, and varied as estates came or went! The late Mr. Holmes, in his laborious editing of the "Pontefract Chartulary" (Yorkshire Archæological Society, Record Series, vols. xxv and xxx), was so deeply impressed with what he found that he constructed lists of hamlets and holdings, known to belong to the larger people, in the hope that he might thus trace out further particulars of them, and records of transfers with the Christian names of the overlords attached by a "de" to the local names of such small estates as they were then dealing with. It is a little difficult to express this clearly without giving some pedigree, which would be of no other interest! But I would refer to vol. xxv mentioned above, p. 254. The descendants of one Asolf of Osgoldcross and Staincross are shewn with constant changes of surname. Adam de Birkin, the son of Peter de Flockton, who was the son of Asolf, has a list given of seven smaller holdings, any one of which might be found in such transfers and subinfeudings. Adam might thus very properly declare himself the lord and owner, and so qualified to grant the charter by putting a "de" before the small place names then dealt with. (See also "Miscellanea of the Thoresby Society," vol. v., pp. 23—62.)

In Dugdale's "Monast.," 1655, vol. i., p. 657, l. 51ª, we find this same Adam describing himself as Adam fitz Peter, and his brothers Thomas and Roger both fitz Peter, while in other charters Adam and Roger appear as "de Birkin" and Thomas as "de Leeds." I would suggest that only in families with many sons and consequent subinfeudations can we expect to find instances like this: Asolf left eight sons, Peter six, and so on, and their estates had to be broken up.

There are possibilities in this idea! and when years hence, calendars and indices nominum et locorum abound, students, then on the world's stage, may thus find out many extra items to add to their "biographies," for it will then, perhaps, become possible to give short life histories of everyone above a certain rank—as I have tried to do in this our history!

To complete this subject and shew fully how a tenant did sometimes acquire a surname with the aristocratic "de," we see above that one Hugh, having been enfeoffed in a portion of Scawsby, on the changes that took place after the death of Roger III. in 1156 (say 1156—1162) appears with the full-fledged title Hugh "de" Scauceby in 1179-80, a form hitherto restricted to nobility only; and his descendants continued to use this same surname and descriptive title. Possibly there was a son, a second generation, called Hugh?

In the Yorkshire Fines, 29 September and 13 October 1206 (Joh'is, No. 284), we find Hugh Pincerna, petent., v. Hugh de Scauceby, ten., per Alexander, his son, posito in loco suo; and Pincerna concedes the whole tenement to John, son of Hugh (Surtees Soc., vol. xlix., pp. 109—284). And in another Fine (No. 304, 29 September to 20 October 1208), William de Ponte, land in Scauceby, calls to warrant Reginald Fabrum de Doncaster, who called to warrant Hugo de Scauceby, who agrees to give other lands elsewhere in Scauceby. And that family went on flourishing in Scauceby, and members frequently occur in the records! This manor was much sub-divided. In the Nomina Villarum, 1316, Ingelramus de Scauceby et Walterus de Harum are returned as holding Scauceby in the parish of Brodsworth, and in another place, 1316, p. 368, Johannes de Crumbwell and Agnes de Langthwayt held Scauceby cum Langethwayt. I suppose this last refers to the overlord's rights, as John de Crumwell had married Idonea de Leyburn in November 1301, and was chief lord jure uxoris until her death s.p. in 1334 (pp. 259, 261). I also have a record so late as 1461, shewing that a Ricardus de Scawsby held lands here for 1 knight's fee, as of the manor of Maltby. Of course it is obvious that the owner of the greater portion of the lands, and who, therefore, resided at the manor house, could alone dare to take the name of the ville with the prefix "de" as his surname. The original Hugh, who held it as 1 knight's fee, would be responsible for that service, and would recover their proportional shares from his own subinfeudatories.

These subinfeuded freeholders had really a greater fixity of tenure than their overlords! Let us consider: (a) So long as their feudal services were duly rendered, and they had committed no heinous crime, the law protected all their chartered rights. (b) Being vassals, they escaped the pains and penalties of rebellion, because, if called upon, they had to render the duties of their holding! (c) Another, and a very serious point! Tournaments were introduced into England at the end of the twelfth century, and, with that love of grandeur and rivalry which was inherent in the very nature of the Norman nobility, led to embarrassment and ruin. As a writer describes it, they "carried their castles, woods, and farms on their backs," that is, they went to these pompous displays clad in their mortgaged estates (Hall's "Chronicle," fo. 74). None below the rank of a knight was admitted, and so those temptations did not reach undertenants, who attended as mere spectators! And now we find, where the manor rolls are yet available, that numberless undertenants held lands in the thirteenth century, which are still in possession of their apparent descendants—the same farms held by the same family name at the present day, that is, for 500 or 600 years, although of course the actual pedigree could not be expected.

Robert de Busli, or de Gresbrok, who, after his father's death in 1156 (p. 312), left Scauceby and took up his residence at Gresbroc and used that name, as his father had done, had married about 1165 the sister of William Paynell, or Paganel, of Drax, Hooton Paynell, etc., a neighbouring estate; which William was son of William Paganel of Hooton Paynell and West Rasen, co. York, and grandson of Alexander Paganel of the same estates, by Agnes his wife, the elder daughter of Robert Fossard.

Records of Robert are far too numerous, and we must only note a very few! In an exchange of lands between Bertram de Bulmer, who was dead before 1156 and Aschetil fitz Gospatric, Robert de Buissei appears as witness (Rievaulx Chartulary, p. 155).

Besides the great estates given to Nigell de Albini his father, with the condition (p. 307) that Roger his son should take the name of Mowbray (Dugd. "Monast.," 1655, vol. i., p. 775, l. 67[b]), Roger himself continued in high favour with Henry I. and with Stephen, and, at the beginning of his reign, also with Henry II., had great concessions of lands in various parts of Yorkshire. He founded Byland Abbey, also Newburgh, and made grants in endowment of several other abbeys in Yorkshire and elsewhere.

In Dugd. "Monast.," 1661, vol. ii., p. 394, l. 16[a], among the gifts to the Hospital of St. Peter at York, we find "Ex dono Rogeri de Mowbray dimidiam carucatam in Baggaby, et duas carucatas in Heneleseyam (Helmesley), et ecclesiam ejusdem villæ, et terram quam habent apud Gresebroc, et molendinum de Hundemaneby, et molendinum de Buleford, et terras quas habent in Donacastre." Just as Helmesley was in the family of de Ros, so Gresbroc was in the de Buslis; and so these gifts were only small holdings, but how they had come to de Mowbray does not appear! But however that may be, Roger very quickly discovered "my Knight of Scalceby," and retained him constantly in his retinue!

In Dugd. "Monast.," vol. ii., p. 646, l. 42[a], we find a favourite knight described as "militi suo speciali," so such a position was possible, and, more than that, frequent, just as we find some of the Gresebrok knights of Shenstone were constant attendants on their then chief lords, the Earls of Warwick, accompanying them everywhere and witnessing many of their charters. De Mowbray was of full age about 1141, and went on Crusade in 1148, fell into great disgrace 1173, and his castles were destroyed and estates forfeited in 1176; after which he went on Crusade for the second time, and is supposed to have died in Syria.

In the Chartulary of Fountains Abbey, folio 91ª, we have this very sad and interesting record (Dugd. "Monast.," 1655, vol. i., p. 758, l. 45ª), which also embodies the date. It is too long for our space, so I give a short abstract only. It discloses to us the heart-broken wife, once in such great prosperity, but now in the deepest distress, and preparing for her own decease, and her husband gone to hide his disgrace and compound with his conscience by Holy Crusade! "Alicia de Gaunt uxor Rogeri de Mubray, of my own free will and by this my charter, confirm to God and the monks of Fountains all that they have of my gift, pertaining to the Honors of Mallesart and Nidderdale and the ville of Asserlac, and in addition give to them the whole of Birnebem, as noted in the charters of Roger my lord, and in charters of my sons Nigell and Robert." "Et sciendum quod ecclesia de Fontibus recepit me in omnibus orationibus et beneficiis suis, et faciet post decessum meum, pro me, plenarium servitium in missis et psalteriis, etc." This concession and confirmation I make to the aforesaid church after Easter, scilicet iiij idus Aprilis (10 April 1176), in the same year in which the castles of Trex and Malesart were thrown down.

It is often very difficult to fix a date to our charters, and so I am glad to supply a limit of time. All Roger de Mowbray's numerous charters must have passed between 1141-2 and 1173, a period of thirty years, from which we must deduct a short time in 1148-9 when he would be absent on his first Crusade. And our Robert continues a constant witness to most of his endowments and gifts.

In the "Liber Niger," 1166, p. 311, Roger de Mowbray declares that he had enfeoffed de novo feodo [that is, since 1 December 1135] Robertus de Busci in 1 knight's fee. This friendly connection must have been made soon after de Mowbray came of age in 1142, and he thus attached to his service, as a knight-dependent, Robert de Bulli, who was mesne lord of Gresbroc and other manors, under Family B as his chief lords; but this position of holding lands in subinfeudation under several, or in some instances many over-lords, was quite an ordinary occurrence, and we constantly find very great people holding lands and owing fealty to families of much less importance than themselves—and this was especially the case where great ancient estates had gradually dwindled away and new magnates arisen. Our territorial history is quite full of it!

We may therefore suppose that perhaps de Mowbray himself used the pronunciation "Busci," although we find some of his charters witnessed by William de Busli (II., Family A, Gen. 3, p. 107) as well as Robert, son of Roger (Family C, Gen. 4), and spelled in various ways to represent it phonetically. We may take it for granted that such surnames as are more frequently mentioned shew the most extraordinary variations of spelling, according to the fancy of scribes, or, as years flowed on, from gradual changes in language and pronunciation, and we see noted at p. 25 thirteen variations within the sixty years of Liber Rubeus! The longer names are the more they get mawled, as if of malice prepense.*

Among the documents of the Abbey of St. André-en-Gouffern is a charter, dated on the 26th of August 1154, whereby John, Count of Ewe (p. 19), restores to Roger de Molbrai certain lands in Normandy, and the name appears with a Norman-French variety among the witnesses, "Robert de Buzi." (Charter 595, "Calendar of Documents in France," ed. G. H. Round, p. 208.)

Among the Charters of Pontefract occur several whereby the family of Folioth enriched that Priory. In Dugd. "Monast.," vol. i., p. 656, l. 20ª, Jordan, about 1155, grants the toft which was of Asgeri, and Robertus de Bulli is the first witness. Again, at l. 65ª, a few years later—say 1159—when Jordan has a wife, Beatricia,

* The Pardons, which extend from about 1300 for 300 years or more, are most curious documents. Every possible or impossible change, not only in spelling, but in actual construction of the names and places, accidental or intentional, are imagined and detailed, so as to ensure protection against every risk and from everything that may have happened up to the date paid for, but they did not cover the sins of the morrow!

whom he consults, and who consents to the deed, he gives to the same Priory of St. Mary and St. John the West Mill at Nortun and some other lands, and confirms to the monks lands at Baghill which had been given them by William Foliot his father, and as "gersuma," they gave to him "x marcas argenti et cappam monachi pluvialem," which, with the help of the Abbé Migne, I translate a monk's waterproof mantle. To some of my readers this may be curious, but students must have met with it frequently! Probably the monks, among their many scientific secrets, had a way of making clothing waterproof! The first witness is Beatrice uxore mea, and as ninth witness, according to Brodsworth's "Notes," occurs Ottone filio Roberti de Builli,* followed by seven more. But from the "Original Chartulary of Pontefract" (Yorkshire Archæological Society, Rec. Series, vol. xxv., charter lxxxx.), Mr. Holmes has been able to add two more names, viz., Roberto de Bulli, No. 3,* and Petro de Gipetuna, No. 4, which makes Otto fil. Rob. de Bulli come out 11th Testis; also Roberto de Pirou in the original is described as "fratre de Templo." He appears elsewhere as a Templar in 1160 and went on Crusade May 1177.

In the same Chartulary (Charter lxxxvii), William Folioth, eldest brother of Jordanus, gives the lands which had been Rannulphus Forestarius and others, and the witnesses are "frater meus Jordanus Folioth et Robertus de Bulli," and many others. And the monks are to pray for the souls of his father and mother "et pro animabus fratrum meorum Jordani et Henrici et Pagani et Ricardi, et pro salute anime mee," etc., but, seeing that Jordanus witnesses it in the flesh, this cannot imply (as in ordinary cases it would) that all these souls were already dead. The date of this charter was about 1170.

Robert, son of Roger, held as mesne lord estates within two or three miles of Pontefract, and on the division between the heirs of Jordanus and Roger, these, as well as the two knights' fees in Bawtre and Austerfield held under the Fossards, came to Family C. William de Busli III. (Family B, Gen. 5) is a frequent witness in 1163 and earlier, but a few years before (say 1155) Robert de Busli (Family C) comes in as a witness; and in his "Notes" on above charter lxxxvii. Mr. Holmes remarks, "evidently Robertus de Bulli was an important person in Pontefract!" but I need not quote any further references from his "Chartulary."

In Pipe Roll, Notts, 1174-5, Robert de Busli owes xx^{s} pro defalt̃.

In Burton's "Monast.," p. 330, Roger de Mowbray, who died in Syria in 1179, gave lands in Bagby to Byland Abbey, which gift was confirmed by Nigel his son, who died 1191-2, which lands were quit-claimed by Adam Fossard 2 Ric. I. (1191) and by Robert Buscy his tenant.

Robert de Builly gave a wax light to Selby Abbey, thus recorded, but no date: "Annuatim percipiendum ad inveniendum unum Cerreum ardentem ante altare Beatæ V. Mariæ scilicet illum cereum quod invenire solebat Robertus de Builly. Et sciendum est quod prædictus Robertus prædictum redditum adquisivit tempore suo et prædicto cereo assignavit, etc. In Carta Ricardi, Clerici de Wystowe." (Yorkshire Archæological Soc., Record Series, vol. x., p. 195, from the "Coucher Book" of Selby.)

(To be continued.)

* In this strangely blundered charter, I would point out that Roberto de Bulli is No. 3, and witness No. 11 is Ottone fil. Roberti de Bulli. Had he been the son of No. 3 he would have been entered next to him in order, and written Ottone filio ejus; but to shew conclusively that he was not his son I point out that this Otto must have been of full age in 1159, and so was born in or before 1138, when our Robert No. 3 (Fam. C, Gen. 4) was only 7 years of age! The Christian name Robert frequently occurs among the Lancashire branch. Mr. Holmes remarks that he "cannot connect him in any way with the great house of Busli," but he seems to have had no acquaintance with the Lancashire branch.

Ancient Simhalese Heraldry.*

Ceylon, where Standards, Badges, and Devices were known from a very early period, furnishes an interesting field for the heraldic student. The Simhalese used the Lion as the national symbol. A lion (Simha) was the mythical ancestor of Prince Wijaya, the Aryan Conqueror of Ceylon; and the people who crossed over with him from North India (B.C. 543) bore the name of Simhalese. The Ceylon Chronicles bear witness that in the third century before Christ, when Buddhism was introduced into the Island, the Great Monastery[1] at Anurādhapura was laid out in the shape of a lion reguardant.[2] Later the walls of the capital were ornamented with figures of lions, and the same emblem appears in numerous sculptures in the sacred city, as well as in the later capitals, such as Pollonnaruwa. The marvellous rock citadel, Sīgiri (the Lion Rock), was shaped in the form of a lion. The national device also appears on the gold coin of Parākrama Bāhu the Great (1164—1197). It is a well-executed lion sejant. National banners were in use in India from the remotest period, and there is scarcely any doubt that the Royal Standard of Ceylon bore the device of a lion. The great Dravidian kingdoms of the Dekhan, with which Ceylon had intimate political relations, possessed distinctive flags almost from the beginning of their history, e.g., the Fish Banner of Pāndiya (Madura) and the Tiger of Chola (Mysore). The armies of Parākrama Bāhu the Great, it is certain, marched to the conquest of South India and Pegu under the Lion banner of Ceylon. Coming to later days, the Royal Standard is specially mentioned in a poetical work of the fifteenth century dealing with the life of Srī Parākrama Bāhu VI. (1411—1467), the last great monarch of a united Ceylon. The line runs :—

"Behold, on the northern side (of the palace) the snowy peak bearing the Lion standard."[3]

Very interesting data are furnished, again, in a Royal grant of the same period.[4] It invests a chief with the privilege of bearing the Lion flag, the double talipot palm sunshade and ceremonial torches. This proves that the Royal insignia, including the Standard, were conferred on chiefs whom the King specially delighted to honour.

Among other dignities which the Kings of Ceylon bestowed on their subjects were the drum of distinction (vira davunde, sometimes displayed on a banner), a golden style, and a chain of gold containing a specified number of strands. Titles of honour were graved on a thin golden plate, which was tied round the recipient's head at his investiture.

It was very probably with the advent of the Portuguese in the sixteenth century that the national flag assumed the strict heraldic blazonry which it ultimately retained: Gules, within a bordure or, with a ray of the sun issuing from each angle, a lion passant or holding a sword of the last. The rays of the sun are typical of the solar dynasty, to which the Kings of Ceylon belonged, and the central figure is the mythical Simhalese lion,[5] the finest example of which is the colossal stone figure that once supported the throne of Kirti Nissauka Malla (1198—1207).[6] The flag with the Crown and Sceptre of Ceylon was granted, as an honourable augmentation, to the arms of Sir Robert Brownrigg, Bart., on the acquisition of the Kandyan kingdom in 1815.[7] The original Standard, with two other flags, is now deposited at Chelsea Hospital.

The Royal coat of arms was also probably evolved during the sixteenth century. It was Gules, within a bordure of Castile a conical crown having a cross flory and a lion rampant, surmounted by an irradiated sun, all or.

The charges are ancient, but the blazoning follows European rules of heraldry. The armorial bearings appear on the tomb of Dom João, one of the Simhalese Princes, buried in Lisbon (in 1642). The crown is surmounted with a cross flory, to indicate that the Prince was a Christian.

* Communicated by E. W. PERERA, Esq.

After the arrival of the Portuguese the ancient knightly orders of the realm were modelled on European lines. The Order of the Hair-relic of Buddha—conferred amongst others on one of the victorious generals of Parākrama the Great—and the Order of the Tooth-relic are notable among the more ancient decorations referred to in the Simhalese Chronicles.[8]

Like the Order of the Golden Fleece, they were endowed with a semi-religious character, were granted for distinguished military service, and were highly esteemed. Beyond this nothing is known. In later times the Order par excellence of the Simhalese sovereigns was that of the Golden Sun, to which Dom João de Austria, or Wimala Dharma Suriya Adhasin (1592—1604), admitted a distinguished Dutch Admiral. The insignia appear in a picture representing one of the Kandyan Kings. The badge of the order was circular, and consisted of a golden emblem of the sun in splendour depending from a golden collar. This, in the shape of a chain of honour, was conferred by the Simhalese Sovereign, as a mark of distinction, from the earliest times. Similarly a jewel, representing the Simhalese double-headed eagle, was worn by the monarch and granted as a special honour.

The great Standard of the Empire, borne in front of the array by nobles of a particular clan appointed for that service, was followed by the banners of the different departments of State and of the provinces. The Monarchs of Ceylon, even when their dominions comprehended only the island, styled themselves Mahārājas, Emperors, or Overlords, because of the several kingdoms and provinces into which the island was divided. In the north, the principality of Jaffna, ruled by a Tamil dynasty, bore on its banner Gemini holding a lyre, in memory of the tradition that the peninsula was granted as guerdon to a blind musician from the Malabar coast, who played before one of the earlier Ceylon monarchs. The eighteen Vanni (forest) districts, overrun and ruled by South Indian Chieftains, had their distinctive ensigns. One of the Chronicles[9] notes that in the thirteenth century Prince Wijaya Bāhu presented the emblems of the Maha Vanni district to its princes. The southern kingdom, Ruhuna, so called after one of Buddha's cousins, bore an elephant of the small species to be found in the region, a number of which formed its tribute to the Overlord.

The Province of Hatara Kōralē had within a bordure the Sun, Moon, and Stars, a flag which legend carries back to the wars of Rāma. The banners of the Tun Kōralē and Nuwarakalāwiya provinces displayed mythical creatures: the former a peculiar double-headed eagle and the latter an elephant-lion. Other districts had other devices, such as a peacock, a leopard, a swan, a bear, a lotus, or fields of a single colour. The flags of the State departments were suggestive of their different duties. The Kūruwe department had an elephant banner, to which the Master of the Elephant was entitled, and the Chief State Secretary bore a flag with a palm-leaf register and a style. One of the Standards at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, is Gules, within a bordure indented or, with a ray of the sun (finial) issuing from each angle gold, having as central figure a double drum with the loop with which it is attached to the drummer's neck, in chief an annulet and a naked hilted sword fesswise, on the dexter side a scabbard palewise, on the sinister side a battle-axe palewise, all or, in base a stringed bow fesswise azure. It probably belonged to the Commander-in-Chief (Senevirat).

In war the people were marshalled under these different banners by the Governor of each Province or the head of each department. It was the same in the annual reviews and religious pageants, a custom followed to this day at the great Buddhist procession in Kandy.[10]

The distinctive ensigns of each caste form a separate class of banner. The different castes were originally organized on the basis of craft-guilds, and carried their own device, emblematical of their trade. The most valuable of these is the flag of the Weavers or Cinnamon-peelers (Salāgama), which dates back to the thirteenth century. It represents several incidents connected with the arrival of the caste from South India, including the reception of their Chief by the King and his investiture with a golden chain, a State umbrella, and a talipot palm sunshade to be borne over him whenever he appeared in public. The original[11] was brought to England by Sir Alexander Johnston in 1827, and a facsimile of it appears in the "Transactions of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland," vol. iii. (1835), p. 71 and p. 332. The variegated religious flag representing the five-coloured halo round Buddha's head, barry of five, is distinctive. This was used from the earliest times on occasions of festival, with banners displaying gold and silver fields.

Badges and cognizances peculiar to individuals and families form a special division. They often originated from a name or an exploit. For instance the cognizance of King Mahanāga (circa B.C. 200) was a great hooded cobra symbolical of his name. This emblem, carved in stone, is met with in the neighbourhood of his capital, Māgama, the classical Māgramum. King Mahasen's (277—304) badge, again, was a cock, armed, combed, and jowlopped, which was the signification of the name of his royal house.[12] Later, when he was deified as an incarnation of the war-god, Mahasen's temples were adorned with the cock banner.[13] The badges of private families have survived to this day as cattle-brands, perhaps one of their earliest uses. They are similar to the family tokens (mon) of the Japanese. Hana,[14] the Simhalese for badge, is cognate with signum, and originally meant a "sign" or "device." With the decay of the kingdom, when the other uses for these hana or badges were forgotten, the word became synonymous with cattle-brands. Every family or clan possessed its own token, each of the members placing one or more letters of their name before the brand, to distinguish their particular cattle. Members of trades or castes, e.g., the carpenter, weaver, smith, potter, and washerman, were attached to each commune and possessed land by tenure of service. They had caste badges or brands, along with the initial of the name of their commune and that of their own name. One of the common brands of a washerman, denoting his calling, was a square that represented the stone on which the linen was bleached. If he belonged to a family unattached to a particular chief or commune he branded his cattle with the square, merely prefixing to it the initial of his own name; otherwise he added the initial of his patron's title or the name of his commune. The study of these badges or brands is exceedingly interesting. Some of the forms come down from the remotest antiquity; others are modifications of earlier forms; others, again, are entirely due to European influence. The series in the appendix was collected in 1835 for official use, and furnishes typical examples of the more prominent brands.

There yet remains another department of Simhalese Arms. The whole island was divided into different counties from the period of its first Aryan settlement, and their limits were defined by boundary-stones. These were inscribed with special emblems, peculiar to each county or district. A descriptive record of these stones is included in the Simhalese "boundary books,"[15] compiled about the fourteenth century. The boundary-stones marking the confines of the district of Kælani were graven with Cobras (Nagas), typical of the aboriginal snake worshippers, whose stronghold it was till Gautama Buddha, according to legend, dispossessed them. After the arrival of the Portuguese the European system of city arms was introduced, and armorial bearings were granted to the chief centres. The city of Colombo had two doves sitting on a mango tree in foliage. They were adapted from columbæ (doves), and a "leafy mango tree" (kola-amba), from the popular Simhalese derivation of Colombo. The word actually means a harbour.

Circular shields were in use, and, as is seen from the Salāgama flag, they were adorned with ornamental figures, mainly geometrical; but there is no evidence that they were charged with coats of arms till after the arrival of the Portuguese (1506). The armorial bearings were principally carried on flags, which were in three forms—banners, swallow-tailed pennons, and sesat, a kind of circular fan, originally white, borne on a long handle. The sesat was a symbol of special honour. Signet rings, heraldically engraved, were very early known in Ceylon. The word for ring in Simhalese denoted a seal, and the design was very probably placed in high relief on the bezel. Seals appear on the treaties made by the Kings of Ceylon with their Portuguese and Dutch allies. The Crown grants, inscribed on metal plates, as well as those engraved on stone, were ornamented with heraldic devices. The royal emblems of the sun and moon, the wheel of empire adopted by the Simhalese Monarchs as Emperors, along with the auspicious sea-chank, frequently occur on these grants, which were impressed with the royal sign manual (Swasti Srī), symbolized in the mystic fylfot. This was the token of the god Vishnu, the tutelary divinity of Ceylon. The bricks which went to form the great Buddhist tope at Māgama (circa B.C. 200) were likewise inscribed with special devices.

Flowers occupied a prominent place in Ceylon heraldry. The sun-flower was the badge of the royal house, as the lotus was that of the nation. The throne of Kandy is decorated with the former. The latter recurs in Buddhist architecture as frequently as the Tudor rose does in England; moreover, it was a sacred flower, consecrated by many a parable and tradition in the Buddhist scriptures. White was the royal colour: its use was limited by sumptuary law to particular privileged individuals and classes.

Bards preserved the genealogies of princely and royal houses. They were orally transmitted in verse, and sung on festive occasions to the accompaniment of music. Purity of blood in the four quarters was required before an alliance could be considered worthy; and gentle birth was constituted by an unblemished descent of seven generations.

There is scarcely any trace of mottoes in connection with arms, but war-cries were known, the name of the warrior himself being that most often used.

Heraldic ornaments were also applied in ancient Ceylon to the decoration of domestic utensils and to architecture. The old drinking-cups, as the name (Gotuwa) implies, were moulded in the shape of a calix, while the escallop-shell was a favourite form of the metal dish,[16] used at meals by the higher classes. Moulds containing the devices of the elephant and the national lion were employed in the preparation of palm-sugar sweetmeats, and geometrical figures appeared largely in the decoration of such articles of domestic use as grindstones and pitchers. The sacrificial square of the early Aryans gave name and shape to the rectangular seat (vedika), which was built of masonry against the walls in private houses as in palaces. The finely-carved semicircular slab, miscalled the moonstone, which formed the entrance to the temples of Anurādhapura, etc., is a heraldic composition of great value and antiquity. It displays in its outer row excellent representations in relief of the horse, the elephant, the lion, and the bull. The central row shews a series of sacred swans, while the inner concentric fillets are occupied with emblems of the bud, leaf, and flower of the lotus. Private dwellings, too, were adorned with frescoes containing mythological beings, and sculptured images of them occupied the angles of the flat roof tops. The ancient Simhalese pinnacle or spire—in the case of temples and palaces made of gold and crowned with gems—heraldically signified supreme excellence and dignity, and was displayed on the four corners of the royal banner. It was misinterpreted by European heralds as a ray of the sun. Symbols of the heavenly bodies were peculiarly the insignia of royalty. The ivory throne in the Brazen Palace of Anurādhapura was adorned by King Dutugæmunu (B.C. 161—137) with the emblem of the sun in gold, the moon in silver, and the stars in pearls, while the eight auspicious symbols—a lion, a bull, an elephant, a pitcher, a fan, a flag, a chank, and a lamp—figured on the canopy. The white umbrella of dominion, studded with jewels and fringed with pearls, was borne aloft on a silver pole surmounting the throne, which was raised on a pedestal against a carved stone arch. From the combined Makaras, or fish monsters, forming the principal ornament, the whole structure was called the Makara Arch. The façade of the old Palace at Kandy (circa 1600), maintaining the ancient tradition, is adorned in plaster relief with the crescent and the sun in splendour, emblematical of the solar and lunar races, united in the Simhalese royal house. The design on the ivory throne appears to have been traditional. The gilt silver throne of the last King of Kandy[17] has the moon and stars, with an irradiated sun on the back, and lions as arm-rests.

There were five varieties of Crown in ancient Ceylon,[18] principally distinguished from each other by the different heraldic creatures, such as the demi-tiger, which sprang from the gold circlet. They were the Celestial (conical), Lion, Tiger, Jewel, and Golden Crowns.[18]

Coins bore heraldic devices from an early age. The lion sejant of the gold coin of Parākrama Bāhu the Great has already been noted. A bull figures on the rare coin assigned to the Lords of Ramnad, the hereditary keepers of Adam's Bridge (Setupati). The trident (trisula) or sceptre, lotus, fylfot (Swastika), with a conventionalized figure of a king sitting or standing, are emblems most frequently to be met with on the Ceylon coinage.

It is greatly to be desired that all heraldic devices and communal and personal brands should be collected before they totally disappear, or the ancient forms are modified beyond redemption, under the impact of modern disintegrating forces.

Reviews.

Some Notes on the Stokes Family, counties of Wilts and Gloucester. Edited by ARTHUR SCHOMBERG. Devizes: "Gazette" Office. 1903.

THIS is a quarto pamphlet of nearly 100 pages with five illustrations, one shewing the Duchess of Suffolk and her husband Adrian Stokes, and which was exhibited at South Kensington in 1868. The Editor has accumulated a mass of information of the Stokes of Seend, giving post-mortem Chancery Inquisitions and Wills of the members of the family from 1301—1758. Altogether the Notes form a substantial history of the Stokes and Snell Families and others, and they have the satisfaction of knowing what a complete genealogical history the Editor has compiled for them and their connections. The whole is neatly got up with a coloured paper binding.

Notes about Robert Dodsley and the Dodsley Family. By A. STAPLETON. Mansfield: J. Linnney, West Gate. 1909.

THIS is a small octavo giving an account of Mr. Robert Dodsley, bookseller of Pall Mall in 1760, who kept the Free School at Mansfield, and was a little deformed man, who married a young girl of seventeen when he was seventy-five, and had a child by her when he was seventy-eight. Beginning by taking a minor position, he lived to accumulate upwards of £2000, which he left to his relations, and died at Mansfield in 1780, leaving several children, among whom was his son Robert the poet, who was apprenticed to a hosier, but he ran away, and finally was employed in the Hon. Mrs. Lowther's establishment. Both the father and son were gifted, the former leaving a book of coloured drawings, and having his portrait taken by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and the son compiling several articles for the press besides poems accompanying them. The Memoir is interesting, and the materials are well set out by the Author.

The Virginia Magazine of History and Biography. Vol. XVII., No. 4, for October 1909. Virginia Historical Society, Richmond, U.S.A.

THIS Part commences with Acts of the Virginia Assembly from September 1667, and is continued up to November 1676, with appointment of Sir Henry Chicheley to be Lieutenant-General by Charles II. of the forces raised in Virginia. This is succeeded by Orders issued in Virginia in 1652-3, and the Virginia Legislative Papers and Miscellaneous Colonial Documents issued up to 1675.

Mr. Withington of London has an article on Virginia Gleanings in England, giving the wills of several gentlemen owning land or having connections in Virginia and dying in England. The Revolutionary Army Orders issued from 1778-9, at the time when Philadelphia was evacuated by the British Army in 1778, and Washington commenced his march to Monmouth, New Jersey, are given. Genealogies of the families of Brent, Brooke, and others follow, and then Notes and Queries and Reviews, making the whole generally interesting. The Part concludes with the Title and Index for Vol. XVII.

Fenland Notes and Queries. Vol. VII., Part 83, October 1909. Edited by the Rev. W. D. SWEETING, M.A. Peterborough: George C. Caster, Market Place.

IN opening the above Part, we were pleased to see the portrait of the worthy Editor, but were pained to find that he found the weight of years against him, and it is with feelings of sincere regret that he has to announce to his readers that he is retiring from the editorship after eighteen years, and the Journal will be discontinued for the present at any rate, as the Publisher thinks it is desirable.

The Part has its usual diversified intelligence of the Fens generally, and closes with a very feeling "Farewell" to his readers by the Editor. The Publisher supplies the Title and three Indices of Persons, Places, and Subjects, which complete a very full number.
